"The great founder of the democratic party, whose profound philosophy penetrated all the depths of human nature and measured the height and breadth of human government, not long before the end of his mortal life, said in a letter to Mr. Lee that there were but two permanent parties, the aristocratic and the democratic; that these two parties existed in every country where they have had a free-dom to think, speak and write, these parties would become apparent. With the aristocratic party he classed 'those who fear and distrust the people and wish, all power from them into the hands of the higher classes.' With the democratic party he classed 'those who identify themselves with the people, have confidence in them, cherish and consider them as the most honest and safe, though not the most wise, depository of the public interests.' Every well informed student of history will recognize this distinction. In every community you can draw a line separating the aristocrat from the democrat. It will not be a perpendicular line, nor will it be a horizontal one; it will not separate those of illustrious lineage from those of humble birth; it will not separate the rich from the poor; it will not separate the educated from the uneducated; it will not be along lines of vocation or occupation; but it will separate those with the instinctive, spiritual sumption and feeling of the right to them, speak and write, these parties would become apparent. With the aristocratic party he classed 'those who fear and distrust the people and wish, all power from them into the hands of the higher classes.' Democracy of Jefferson.

"Jefferson was born of refined and well-to-do parents. He was even rich for that period, and he was educated far above the most of his associates; he was a lawyer and his social connections were favorable to aristocratic ideas, but he was a democrat. He believed in the brotherhood of man; he asked for no privileges that could not be granted to all; he claimed no rights that all did not enjoy, and he asked for himself no governmental care that he did not demand for others. He believed in the rule of the people, in their capacity for self-government and in their right to the control of their own affairs. He did not doubt that they would make mistakes, but he knew that they would bear punishment for their mistakes with more fortitude and complacency than they would endure punishment for the mistakes of others, and he was certain that their errors would be unintentional ones. He knew that as they found no profit in bad laws, they would strive to correct them and would profit by experience. He was a friend of everything that helped the people, and the unrelenting foe of everything that injured them. He was identified with the masses, and conferred that identification by inheritance or by his own efforts he possessed any advantage over others, he held that advantage as a trustee for those less fortunate. The people loved him because he first loved them. He organized a party that has lived for more than a century, and he so impressed his ideas upon the party that no federal, however overwhelming, has been able to crush its spirit or disintegrate it.

"There can always be harmony among democrats who have the purpose that Jefferson had and are willing to employ the methods that Jefferson employed. There can always be harmony among democrats who believe in the government of the people and are willing that all the departments of the government shall be operated by the people and for the benefit of the people. Differences as to methods may be reconciled; differences of purpose cannot. Between one who is at heart an aristocrat and one who is in reality a democrat there is a great gulf fixed. Even in a party, indeed, among the aristocrats there will be found the same division that exists among the beasts of prey—some have the courage of the lion, and others the cunning and the ferocity of the fox, but they can hunt together if their object is spoil, whether it be avowed or concealed. Between those really democratic in purpose there can be no personal or permanent alienation, because having no ulterior motives, they are open to arguments and amenable to reason; being honest in purpose, they have confidence in the triumph of their cause, and are content to employ honest methods. They will neither conspire against others nor against each other. If they make mistakes in judgment, as all are liable to do, they are not only willing, but anxious to correct their mistakes. In politics, as in religion, there is an essential difference between a doubt of the head and a doubt of the heart.

Aristocrat vs. Democrat.

"It is impossible to secure harmony between people of opposite sympathies, and it is a difficult thing to change a man's sympathies; it requires, as a political regeneration to make a democrat out of an aristocrat. It is a much easier task to show a man that the principles he has been advocating and the policies which he has been supporting are aristocratic in their present effect or in their tendencies. The republican party of to-day is aristocratic in its control, for, in the first place, it is controlled by a few in the interest of a few, but there are many republicans who remain with their party only because they do not understand the change which has taken place in that party within the last few years. When the policy of a party is controlled by its voters, then the party stands for the will of the majority, but when the party is dominated by a small minority then the organization stands not for the will of the majority, but for the will of those who dominate it. There can be no doubt of the democratic instincts of a large majority of the members of the republican party, but that party to-day is so controlled by organized wealth that the rank and file of the party are not consulted about the policies nor are the interests of the rank and file considered by the leaders. With the exception of the tariff question, the republican party has not in recent years honestly submitted to the people important issue to the arbitrament of the ballot, or even to the judgment of the members of its own party. It has written ambiguous platforms and forced its policies through congress after elections. In 1896 it used a promise of international bimetallism to conceal its real purpose to fasten the gold standard on the country. In 1900 it practiced the same deception on imperialism and on the trust question. Even within a month it has refused to announce its purpose in regard to the Philippines, and has put off until after November the passage of the subsidy bill and the consideration of the trust question. The leaders of the party show their lack of vital faith in the doctrine of self-government by their unwillingness to take the people of the country, or even the voters of their own party, into their confidence. The hope of the democratic party lies in bringing this fact to the knowledge of those who have been in the habit of voting the republican ticket. One aristocratic party in the country is enough. Democratic principles can be won, not by betraying the republican party, but by exposing it—not by making the democratic party aristocratic, but by convincing the people that it is the democratic party that can be trusted to defend democratic ideas and to cultivate democratic ideals. As there are many in the republican party who have adhered to the party notwithstanding the change that the organization has undergone, so there are some who call themselves democrats who have themselves undergone a change which has separated them from the democratic party, or from any party worthy of the name.

Deserters of Two Classes.

"To attempt to patch up an apparent harmony between those who are in sympathy with democratic purposes is not only a waste of time, but would prove disastrous. The men who deserted the party in 1896 may be divided into two classes. Those who left because they understood the issue presented and those who left because they did not understand the real nature of the contest. The former are now are completely changed in their sympathies they cannot return to the party without injury to it. The latter will be reconciled to the party when they themselves become aware of the real character of the life and death struggle now being waged between plutocracy and democracy. Any plutocracy, because the aristocracy of to-day is one of wealth rather than of birth, and it includes not only those who have been ennobled from the common people by the possession of great wealth, but those who, although without wealth, prefer to it and measure all things by a money standard. Organized wealth is the most potent in governmental affairs that somehow despair of applying any effective remedy. But such underestimate the patriotism of the people and the strength of the public conscience. The people have a remedy within their power, namely the ballot, and with it they can and will right every wrong of which they may grievance.

Party Must Stand Firm.

"The democratic party must have a controlling purpose, unchanged by victory or defeat; it must stand for that purpose at all times and everywhere, unmoved by threats of defeat and unseduced by promise of temporary gain. It must have a character, for character is as essential in a party as it is in an individual. No one will insist that the principle of local self-government and the right to the control of their own affairs. He did not doubt that they would make mistakes, but he knew that they would bear punishment for their mistakes with more fortitude and complacency than they would endure punishment for the mistakes of others, and he was certain that their errors would be unintentional ones. He knew that as they found no profit in bad laws, they would strive to correct them and would profit by experience. He was a friend of everything that helped the people, and the unrelenting foe of everything that injured them. He was identified with the masses, and conferred that identification by inheritance or by his own efforts he possessed any advantage over others, he held that advantage as a trustee for those less fortunate. The people loved him because he first loved them. He organized a party that has lived for more than a century, and he so impressed his ideas upon the party that no federal, however overwhelming, has been able to crush its spirit or disintegrate it.

There can always be harmony among democrats who believe in the government of the people and are willing that all the departments of the government shall be operated by the people and for the benefit of the people. Republican Platforms Insincere.

"Our platforms are insincere. The democratic platform declares for the maintenance of the existing tariff, but the democratic party has always been a tariff for revenue party, and the democratic platform of 1896 declared for a tariff for revenue only. The republican platform promises to pass a tariff bill based upon the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, but the republican party has always refused to vote for a bill drawn upon that principle, and the republican platform of 1900 does not even mention the word 'protection.' The democratic platform promises to prevent the further issue of bonds and the retirement of the greenbacks, but the democratic party has always been in favor of issuing bonds rather than collect the taxes and has opposed the retirement of the greenbacks. The republican platform promises to prevent the issue of bonds, but the republican

EVERY-DAY RELIGION

It Was the Kind David Had, and It Is the Kind You Need.

Sermon by the "Highway and Byway" Preacher, in Which He Shows That God Wants to Enter into Every Detail of Our Lives.

Chicago, July 27, 1902.

TEXT: My soul shall make her boast in the Lord: the humble shall hear thereof, and be glad. Psalm, 34:2.

David's Song.—While threatened by foes from within and without, while fleeing for his life from the jealous wrath of King Saul and meeting new perils in the heathen nations about, so that a cave in the mountain side must needs become his refuge, David's heart gave birth to the wonderful song of which our text is but a fragment. In the twenty-first chapter of 1. Samuel we find recorded the thrilling incidents which inspired the heart of the shepherd-poet to sing this paen of triumphant praise. Every word swells and throbs with life and real experience. It is not the ecstatic sentiment of the emotional religious enthusiast who thrills his hearers in the meeting house, and then goes out and forgets to live his religion in his life, but its every note and word echoes with the experiences of the hurried flight from the presence of Saul to the court of the king of Gath and back again to the cave of Adullam. Amidst all the perils that beset him, David's heart beats in quiet confidence in his God. He has no time to tell of wrongs suffered. He leaves that with the Lord, and begins and ends his song with bursts of praise and confidence. Between the "I will bless the Lord at all times" of the first verse, and "the Lord redeemeth the soul of His servants," of the last verse, are crowded some of the most trying and terrible experiences of his life, but which were made bright by the presence and help of the Lord.

David's Religion.—Thus we see that David's religion was not something he put on and off as the occasion seemed to require, but was of such a practical character, so very real, as to enter into every detail of his life. As a boy, out on the mountain side with his sheep, he had learned the music of the birds, had felt the inspiration of God's nature all about him, had learned a lesson from each star as it kept its silent, faithful sentinel above him, and yet when he dropped his harp to grapple with the lion and the bear which had attacked the sheep, he did not let his religion go, too, but in the strength of the Lord he slew the lion and the bear. His religion was not something he enjoyed only on feast days, when, away from his sheep, he went to pay his vows unto the Lord, but was a real something which kept him faithful to the smallest detail of his work and held him at his post of duty when the rest of the family were shying off to town to see the prophet Samuel, who had come on a mysterious mission.

All the other boys of the family were on hand at dinner, each an eager candidate for the prophet's favor and blessing, while David's religion kept him out in the sheep cote finishing up the chores, all unconscious that his Lord was about to say: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things." David's religion gave him true humility, which kept him in his place until the prophet's call brought him, all aglow in his boyish beauty, to the place where he received the anointing of the Lord as the king of Israel. Although only a stripling, he did not lose his head in the hour of so great honor and start off post haste for the palace of King Saul to tell him that the Lord had given him his job, and he must get out, but he steadied himself with a new grip on the Lord, and went back to his sheep, knowing that the Lord who had called him was able to bring it to pass in His own good time. No doubt his brothers had many a quiet laugh over the matter, and when they went off to war against the Philistines believed that the aged prophet had made a mistake after all, and that, after they had led the armies of Israel to victory, one of them would be in line for the kingly honors.

But the quality of their religion, like that of many, many Christians today, while very good for worshiping occasions, for the Sabbath day and feast days, something to be called by, and something to talk about, yet when it came to the practical problems of life it evaporated at their finger ends and their knees rattled together with those of the rest of the Israelites when Goliath came out and defied the God they pretended to worship, and whom they claimed to be the only God, the powerful God. Yes, they had just as much religion as they were willing to put up in a test against the false gods of the blasphemous Philistine giant, and that was a precious little, now wasn't it? How much religion have you got? Just enough to keep you from going over to the camp of the Philistines and making abject surrender to them and their false gods, and not enough to enable you to go out and fight the Goliath who is defying you and your God. Shame on you! You know not the power and might of the God whom you pretend to serve.

But David had enough religion to keep him in faithful service to the sheep out on the hillside, and then, obedient to the command of his father, he started off with his religion for the camp of the Israelites to serve his brothers. And the Lord, whom David so took into every-day partnership as to dignify the most menial service into an opportunity of serving God, now goes with the simple-hearted youth and nerves his arm and steadies his aim as he sends the stone crashing into the skull of the terrible giant and lays the blatant champion low upon the ground. David had enough religion to grapple with any problem which confronted him, whether it was picking a green pasture for the hungry, helpless sheep, or resting beside the rippling stream singing upon his harp; whether it was holding his temper when his brothers poked fun at him after he proposed to fight the giant, or giving him modesty when standing in the presence of the king with the head of the giant in his hands. David's religion was such a real thing that it made his Lord a very present help in his work and in his play, at home and abroad, in the day of peril and adversity and in the day of prosperity and quiet ease. This is the kind of religion that counts. It is not man-made, but is God-given. The every-day religion tests the power of God and is able to go out in the hour of need and fight the Goliaths of sin, who are presenting themselves for battle every day.

The best testimony we had in prayer meeting recently and the one that stirred those in attendance the most was the statement by a young lady that the Lord was helping her to wash the supper dishes, a task she disliked to do very much. Her religion was a reality to her, and in the actual experiences of every-day life it was helping her to bear burdens that otherwise would have been unbearable.

The religion of too many people is like that of the minister whose little daughter, when asked what her father did, said that he didn't do anything but just preach. There is too much preaching and too little practicing in the world to-day. The religion that will shine forth in the meeting house and evaporate completely away before the delayed dinner, or n cross baby, in the home, doesn't serve very much practical purpose. If my religion does not make its presence of the Lord so real as to help me keep my temper when some one treads upon my toes, or infringes upon my rights, of how much use is my testimony in the name of the same Lord in the prayer meeting? If my religion does not prevent me from having two codes of morals, one for the home circle of friends and acquaintances and another for the time when I am away from home in a strange city, how much do you suppose it counts before God? If my religion may not be applied to the every-day problems of life, and does not make me a better man in the home, in the office or shop, on the street, anywhere and everywhere, of what real value is it to me or any one else?

Many a husband or wife or child in a home knows that the spoken testimony in meeting is a sound of words, and that the speaker is a hypocrite without perhaps meaning to be. The strongest denunciations of Christ were spoken against those who wore the cloak of religion and missed the heart of it in the every-day life. Religion is good for nothing if not lived out in the life. God measures it by the number of robbed and wounded travelers we, in the spirit of the Samaritan of the parable, help by the roadside, by a number of glasses of cold water we give in the name of the Master, by the number of victories we win over the flesh and the devil. God does not take us at our own estimate, nor according to the reputation we sustain in the community, nor the length of our prayer in church, but judges us, as Christ declared, by the fruit we bear. True, we are saved by faith in the blood of Jesus Christ, but we determine how much salvation we really have by the way in which we apply that salvation to the daily conduct. Christ alone can give us a new heart and renew a right spirit within us, but having been born again by faith in Jesus Christ, we must let the new heart and the Spirit of God dominate more and more in every detail of life. This is the test of our religion.

Some people are so careful of their religion that they only get it out once a week, brush off the dust and carry it carefully to church, and when the service is over return it to its resting place as quickly as possible for fear it will fade or become tarnished from the vulgar gaze of the world, and, like the priceless diamond tiara of the rich lady which she kept locked up in her safe so carefully and which on being examined by the expert was found to be a splendid sham and worthless, so will the Sunday religion of many a devotee be found at the last day of judgment to be nothing more than an ingenious imitation of the real article and will not admit to even the vestibule of Heaven.

David's Boast.—And because David's religion was the real article he was not afraid to use it seven days in the week, and he found that the more he used it the brighter it became. No wonder he confidently declares: "My soul shall make her boast in the Lord." It is one thing for the lips to speak and quite another matter for every chord of the human heart to vibrate in actual experience with the story which the lips are telling. It is so easy for the lips to talk deep religious truths, and quite another matter to carry those truths down into the hidden depths of the heart's real experiences. David, in the security of the homeland, with no foe to molest him or make him afraid, never could have sung this song, but as a fugitive in the power of a heathen king, face to face with death, he knew what it was to praise God for His faithfulness and say: "This poor man cried, and the Lord heard, and saved him out of all his troubles." As he sees the powerful army of King Achish surrounding him in his helplessness, and realizes that but a word from the king is necessary to set the soldiers upon him and tear him limb from limb, his spiritual vision, quickened in the moment of peril, sees the angel of the Lord and His host encamped round about him to deliver him. Alone in a strange land, with unfriendly heathen about him, and no companion in whom to trust and confide, he turns to the Lord with all the intensity of his lovable nature and finds in Him a satisfying portion; and turning to you and me he pleads: "O taste and see that the Lord is good; blessed is the man that trusteth in Him."

The experiences of life under the hand of the Lord will blossom into beautiful fruits of spiritual joy and satisfaction so that the soul can declare with David: "My soul shall make her boast in the Lord," but the soul that puts its Lord on a pedestal and makes Him an object of worship at appointed times and seasons and in set places, and does not take Him into the everyday experiences in the shop, in the home, on the street, misses the very heart of religion and the purpose of God. He may be able boldly to say in meeting that his boast is in the Lord, but if he has not learned what it means to stand with his Lord in the heat of the everyday conflict and peril, it is but an idle boast and he knows not whereof he speaks.

The World's Boast.—And if David made his boast in the Lord, in what, think you, does the world boast itself? Its boast does not reach up into the heavens, where God has His dwelling place, but is found within itself, and is of the earth, earthy. It boasts of the riches, gold, silver, precious stones, which are taken from its bosom; it boasts of its power, and in its strength oppresses the weak; it boasts of its learning and wisdom and speaks unto itself great things and high-sounding phrases, forgetful of the fact that the foolishness of God is wiser than men; it boasts of its culture and refinement, so-called, and fails to see under the polished surface the seething mass of corruption which has ultimately wrought the destruction of every nation which has yet in the world's history held sway for a time. Persia, Babylon, Greece, Rome have flourished in their day, and made their boast each in its turn of their wealth, and power, and wisdom, and culture, and refinement, and then perished miserably by means of the very things in which they put their trust.

The world is an awful boaster. It boasted of its own security and prosperity even while Noah was busy building the ark and God was filling the heavens with rain with which to deluge the sin-cursed earth. It boasted itself in the rearing of the tower of Babel that it was going to build into the heavens and above another possible flood, and even while it wrought in the vain imaginings of its own heart the wrath of God fell upon the foolish boasters and scattered them hither and thither. But they carried their boastful spirit with them, and if they no longer all spoke the same language, this one thing they had in common.

"Friend, where is thy boast? In what are you putting your trust? In the things of time, which perish? Goliath boasted in his strength, and in the many gods of his nation, and what was he and what were they before that simple-hearted youth who makes his boast in the Lord? The Philistine said: "I will give thy flesh unto the fowls of the air, and to the beasts of the field." David said: "Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield; but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied. This day will the Lord deliver thee into mine hand." And the Lord did. As the Psalmist says: "It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man. It is better to trust the Lord than to put confidence in princes." Is it not time that the world began to learn the lesson? Is it not about time that you began to learn the lesson, too?

The people of the world are like the little boy who, when asked if he did not pray God to take care of him during the day the same as he did at night, replied that he didn't have to, as he could take care of himself then very well. But, thank God! all hearts are not blind to the greatest need of the soul, and the boast of David in the Lord sets other hearts to vibrating to the same blessed tune, for our text goes on to say: "For the humble shall hear thereof and be glad." And it didn't make the mighty warrior, the great king, the wise ruler sorry a bit to feel that his followers were found in such a class. Jesus Christ Himself thanked His Father that these things were hid from the wise and prudent and had been revealed unto babes. Why so? Not because He wanted it so, but because the pride of the human heart decreed it so and would not yield its will to the will of God.

"The humble shall hear thereof and be glad." The boast of David in the Lord who never failed him did not move the heart of King Saul, who in his self will was going to miserable defeat and a suicide's grave, but it found a responsive chord in the breast of his son Jonathan, who boasted in David's God rather than in the prospects of a kingdom. The proud and wise sit under the sound of David's words unmoved, and fail to understand, while the humble, the lowly in spirit, take up the music of the triumphant song and know that he that boasteth in the Lord starts ripples over the sea of life which reach through time on into eternity and to the very presence of God. It is a boast that finds its birth in the everyday religion. It is a boast that brings sunshine into every dark moment and tunes the heart to sing,

"Every day, every hour,
Let me feel Thy cleansing power;
May Thy tender love to me
Bind me closer, closer, Lord to Thee."

HIS LIMIT OF LAZINESS.

This Man Named His Two Dogs "Cocoa," Because They Were Always Together.

"I never hear laziness discussed," said Frederick Kost, the artist, according to the New York Times, "but I think of old man Crawford, who used to keep an inn down on South beach, when the place was practically a wilderness, and a lot of us fellows were in the habit of running down there to sketch. He was without doubt the fellow most utterly devoid of energy it is possible to imagine. He wouldn't have breathed if he could have helped it.

"One of his sons, who had settled in New York, sent him two dachshund pups. I remember just how Crawford would sit sunning himself on the porch the whole day, with one of these dogs, like animated sausages, on each side of him. They were always by him, one to the left, the other to the right of his chair, when they were at rest.

"One day, as I sat talking to him, the dogs were romping in the house. Crawford turned and called: 'Here, Cocoa, Cocoa!' and the dachshunds came trotting out.

"'What are their names, Crawford?' I asked, thinking I had misunderstood.

"'Cocoa,' replied Crawford.

"'But there are two,' I reminded him.

"'One does for both,' replied the old man. 'They're always together—come and go at the same time. And, anyhow, I'm not going to worry myself into a decline by thinking up dogs' names.'"

He Had One.

"Do you guarantee a fit?" asked the anxious man, as he entered the tailor's shop.

"Oh, yes; you'll have a fit all right," said the obliging person with the tape measure. And when the clothes were delivered and he found that the trousers were cut too short, the anxious man had one as he gurgled: "How true them words was spoke!"—Baltimore News.

Elbow Power.

"I tell you," said the doctor, "it's the man who can push himself along that succeeds best in this world."

"Not at all," replied the professor. "It's the man who can shove others out of his way that succeeds best."—St. Louis Republic.

PELVIC CATARRH

CAUSES

Palpitation of the Heart, Cold Hands and Feet, Sinking Feelings---Pe-ru-na Cures Catarrh Wherever Located.

Mrs. X. Schneider, 2409 Thirty-seventh Place, Chicago, Ill., writes:

"After taking several remedies without result, I began in January, 1901, to take your valuable remedy, Peruna. I was a complete wreck. Had palpitation of the heart, cold hands and feet, female weakness, no appetite, trembling, sinking feeling nearly all the time. You said I was suffering with systemic catarrh, and I believe that I received your help in the nick of time. I followed your directions carefully and can say today that I am well again. I cannot thank you enough for my cure. I will always be your debtor. I have already recommended Peruna to my friends and neighbors and they all praise it. I wish that all suffering women would try it. I testify this according to the truth." Mrs. X. Schneider.

Over half the women have catarrh in some form or another. And yet, probably, not a tenth of the women know that their disease is catarrh. To distinguish catarrh of various organs it has been named very differently.

One woman has dyspepsia, another bronchitis, another Bright's disease, another liver complaint, another consumption, another female complaint. These women would be very much surprised to hear that they are all suffering with chronic catarrh. But it is so, nevertheless.

Each one of these troubles and a great many more are simply catarrh—that is, chronic inflammation of the mucous lining of whichever organ is affected. Any internal remedy that will cure catarrh in one location will cure it in any other. This is why Peruna has become so justly famous in the cure of female diseases. It cures catarrh wherever located. Its cures remain. Peruna does not palliate—it cures.

Hon. Joseph H. Crowley, Congressman from Illinois, writes from Robinson, Ill., the following praise for the great catarrhal tonic Peruna. Congressman Crowley says:

"Mrs. Crowley has taken a number of bottles of Peruna on account of nervous troubles. It has proven a strong tonic and lasting cure. I can cheerfully recommend it."—J. B. Crowley.

W. L. RIDDELL, - - Publisher.

For State Senator.

The RECORDER is authorized to announce J. W. CAMMACK, of Owenton, as a candidate for State Senator in the 23rd Senatorial District, composed of the counties of Boone, Owen and Gallatin, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

For Circuit Clerk.

We are authorized to announce S. E. TERRILL, of Idlewild, as a candidate for Circuit Court Clerk, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

For Jailer.

The RECORDER is authorized to announce SAMUEL ADAMS as a candidate for Jailer of Boone county, subject to the action of the Democratic party.—Primary electiyn, Aug. 23d, 1902.

IT looks like some of the farmers will have to tear down their barns and build lager ones this fall.

IF the next exhibition of the North Kentucky Agricultural Association is not a record breaker, present indications are very misleading.

THE Philadelphia Publie Ledger sold, recently, for $2,500,000. The purchaser could have saved at least $2,000,000 by buying the RECORDER.

THE Kentucky Press Association enjoyed the breezes on and about the great lakes, last week. A grand time was had by all who participated in the itinery.

THE Crittenden Press issued a mining edition several days since, that was replete with mining news of that county. It was handsomely illustrated and a credit to Messrs. Walker.

WHILE the wheat has yielded well in this county, it has fallen short on quality. There is an occasional crop where the berry is very fine, but such crops are few and far between.

THE race for circuit judge in the twelfth judical district between Judge Carroll, the present incumbent, and Hon. Frank Peak, is getting pretty warm, both sides claiming a victory. The primary takes place August 16th.

THE indications are that there will be a big field of candidates lined up for the Democratic nominations for State offices next year. They are now sending out considerable type-written matter on the early bird theory.

IT is funny; very funny that anyone who read the RECORDER'S propositon to furnish each of its staff of correspondents a free ticket to the fair one day, should misread the proposition so as to understand it to mean each subscriber. Read again, friends.

THE magnificent crop prospects in this county make the farmers jubilant compared with what they were this time one year ago, when the pastures were as brown as they ought to be in October, and grass was burning to a powder and blowing out of the fields. The contrast between the crop prospect now and that of a 12 months since is very marked.

ACCORDING to Western ideas the married woman in Japan is not to be envied. A Japanese girls' marriage dowry consists of nothing beyond her dresses, a little writing desk, a box of cosmetics and other toilet necessaries, a couple of little dining tables and a few lacquer plates. Japanese women do not inherit fortunes and in families where there is no son one is adopted as an heir.

IN criticising Andrew Carnegie The Chicago Tribune, one of the leading Republican dailies of the country makes a startling confession. It says:

"Mr. Carnegie made his money in a magnificent way, but he should never forget that he made it through the undue favoritism of the government of the United States. Owing to the discrimination practiced in his favor by the tariff, he was enabled to amass a fortune of two hundred millions of dollars or more, most of which came out of the pockets of his countrymen through the operations of unequal laws."

Hon. Charles W. Nesbeth has withdrawn from the race for Circuit Judge in the Montgomery district, which leaves a clear field for Allie W. Young.

Statistics compiled at the Adjutant General office shows that 9.7 per cent. of the soldiers sent to the Philippines have been killed, and that over 2,500 have died of disease.

IT is said that a prominent Carroll county official and an editor of different political faith in Carrollton, each are aspiring to become United States Senators, and with that in view they have gone into training.

The President has given his cabinet officers to understand that they will be expected to take the stump in the campaign this fall. He is not going to trust to the department subordinates the work of defending department records.

The canvass for the Republican Congressional nomination continues to grow hotter as the days go by up in the Eleventh District. Colson says now that Boreing. one of his opponents, will have to submit to an investigation in the federal courton the charge of having received $25,000 on contracts while he has been a member of Congress.

AT Parkersburg, W. Va., Judge Jackson rendered his decision in the "Mother" Jones contempt cases, growing out of the miner's strike. He adjudged the defendants guilty and entered fines and prison sentences in several cases. Judgment was suspended in "Mother" Jones' case because, as the court said, she was "posing as a martyr" and he would not allow her "to force her way into jail." In rendering his opinion Judge Jackson denounced the walking delegates as "vampires that fatten on the labor of honest miners."

AUSTRALIA is suffering from a fearful drouth, the culmination of seven dry years. The loss of stock in the last two years amounts to $75,000,000. Unemployed men by the thousands are drifting into the cities. Communication in the interior has been paralyzed by the low water in the streams. The loss this year, unless rain comes, will be the worst of all, for the sheep are dying by the thousands. Even the rabbits are dying. This is the only good thing in the situation, for the rabbits are a plague.

OF the 37,000,000 women inhabiting the United States on the continent of North America, several thousands of whom are lawyers, only twenty-one have achieved the distinction of being admitted to practice before the bar of the Supreme Court, the most dignified body in the world. Men lawyers have been introduced at every sitting of the court since its organization, more than a century ago, but the prejudice against women in the profession was for many years so strong that not until 1879, and after years of fighting for the right of recognition, did the court open its bar to its sisters in law.

IN the battle between the republican party and the Sugar Trusts thus far the trusts have had everything their own way. Against the advices of McKinley the adjuration of Roosevelt, the pledges of the party platform, the good faith of the Government and the dictate of humane consideration for a suffering and dependent people the trusts bar the way to any modification of the tariff rates that would serve to diminsh their unjust profits. It is the triumph of banded greed over right and justice. The tariff monsters we have created turn upon the nation and hold it by the throat.—Philadelphia Record.

FOLLOWING is a list of articles that are the products of corn: Meal, pearl hominy, hulled corn, canned green corn, canned hulled corn, maizena samp, degerminated samp, cream meal, self-rising pancake flour, quick malt, brewer's grits, husks for packing cofferdams of battle ships, alcohol, degerminated brewer's meal, paper stock prepared from the shells of the cornstalk, bolted corn blades with stalks and cobs, varnish, cob pipes, lager beer, British gum, fancy table syrup, popcorn, table grits, salves, laundry starch, corn starch for cooking, frumentum, flaked hominy, gum paste, corn oil, vulcanized feed, glucose, confectioners glucose and confectioners' paste.

THOSE opposed to the nomination of candidates for State offices by a primary election, rely on the following section of the Democratic party law as settling the question in opposition to a primary:

"Section 5. The State Executive Committee shall have power to determine when and where conventions to nominate candidates for state offices, and all other state conventions, shall be held, and the time and manner of selecting delegates thereto, and the basis of representation shall be prepared and announced by said committee, and shall in all cases be the vote cast at the last Presidential election."

It is claimed that all the authority the committee has it derives from the party law, and in as much as a State primary is not provided for in the foregoing section nor elsewhere in the party law, the Democratic State committee, in calling a primary election to nominate candidates for State offices, would go beyond the pail of its authority.

THERE is a hoodoo in every newspaper office. It hides behind the cobwebs and comes out at critical times and gets in its dastardly work. The story of how the newspaper hoodoo was born is told with hushed breath in every printing establishment. Those who know say that when Herr Gustenberg started the first newspaper in Germany a maiden lady of advanced years persuaded some irresponsible youth to marry her. She left word at the newspaper office that the thing be properly written up. The paper told the facts including a statement about the bride's age, looks and disposition and she, being mad with rage, sold herself to the devil and was transformed into an evil spirit. To this day this evil spirit prowls around newspaper offices. Don't laugh when you see ludicrous things in the paper. They are the devil's work.—Ex.

AN intelligent negro discussing race problem makes use of the the following:

"I have decided that the only way to get rid of the 'jim crow' car is to get rid of the 'jim crow' negro.

"If I could use 200,000bars of soap on the unwashed negroes that travel on trains and hang around depots, I would solve the negro problem about 20 per cent.

"Lazy, ragged, barefeet fellows, longing for silver slippers and long, white robes, and counting themselves worthy, neglecting to provide a home for their families on earth, and yet claiming a house not made with their hands in God's Heaven!

"The white man is trying to make this earth blossom as a rose and the negro is getting ready to die.

"The white man is organizing business enterprises, and the negro organizing societies to turn out at their funerals. Now, I object to a hundred-dollar funeral for a fifty-cent negro."

The executive committee of the Farmers & Tobacco Growers' Association met at Worthville on the 16th inst., a number of counties being represented, and much interest manifested.

Reports were received from the various counties, and considering the fact that the farmers have been so busy, very good progress has been made.

It was decided by the committee to revoke the clause in the agreement which provides for the payment to the farmers for their tobacco, one half in cash, and balance by note payable in 6 months, and instead, provided that the Association would pay the farmers cash in full for their tobacco when it is received.

The committee was assured that all the money needed to run the business would be forthcoming as soon as the organization was perfected.

The president will appoint additional organizers to assist in organizing the balance of the district, and it is to be hoped that the tobacco growers in every county will take hold of the matter at once, notify the president that you want your county organized, get up a meeting, and some one will be there to assist you, and what promises to be the greatest boon to the farmer, will soon be a grand success.

The commitee will meet again September 2nd at La Grange, when every member is earnestly requested to be present.

Address all communications to the president, James M. Gaunt Carrollton Ky.—Carrollton News.

A HISTORIC PLACE.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

This is a city of the fourth-class situated on the Ohio river opposite Cincinnati. The main part of the town is west of "Pigeon Point" and the C. S. R. R.

It is a historic place. Just north of the depot, on the east side of the railroad, you look down on a cottage built upon the spot where once stood the old Ludlow homestead, where John Morgan spent the night after he escaped from the Ohio penitentiary. Some of the old settlers say that it was here that Sarah or Jane, or whatever her name was, of Uncle Tom's Cabin fame crossed the river on the ice, if she ever crossed anywhere. In fact there could be pages written upon the antiquity of this city, true and otherwise.

Ludlow has six churches, nine saloons, one national bank and other minor institutions necessary for a city. The city claims to have the best public school in Kentucky. For the last 6 months it has been a law school, and all the citizens have been students. At last November election the city elected a new board of trustees, but the old board refused to vacate, and enjoined the new board from interfering with their business. The case went to the court of appeals, and the old board's contention was sustained and the new board is perpetually and eternally enjoined from interfering with the old board. Citizens purchased law books and would meet in the saloons and on street corners, discuss, cuss and recuss the Kentucky laws. This proceeding was a great educator, and an effort is now being made to find some law by which to get rid of the old board of trustees without resorting to the painful means of extermination.

The city has been governed by a common council until now, when it is governed by an uncommon council. The citizens claim there are no Chinamen members of the uncommon council, but, nevertheless, five members of the eight are about to wall in the historical old town, and have commenced to raise the money by passing ordinance 444 (4-11-44), licensing vehicles as follows: One horse buggy or sulky, $3; one horse wagon, $5; two horse wagon, $7, and for each additional horse hitched in front or behind, $5. Section 3 of the ordinance says the provisions of the ordinance shall apply to all vehicles kept or used by persons residing without the corporate limits of the city of Ludlow, who make use of the streets of the city of Ludlow. You see by this section of the ordinance that if any of you people in the country wish to visit this historic spot of the "dark and bloody ground" you would better hitch your horse and vehicle outside of the city limits, for it will be better, financially, to walk than to ride. The Boone county farmers wear out the streets by bringing their produce and taking money back to the Boone county bank. Our institutions must be protected at any cost.

The city has a very good fire department, and a Mayor who is President of the uncommon council. The police force is very efficient, and consists of one man, who is called chief, and he is kept very busy stopping farmers to collect the notorious license. Brother farmers, don't blame him.

CHINAMAN.

A young lawyer from the south appearing before Justice Blanchard in the New York supreme court on a motion a few days ago became entangled in complications of his own creation and was floundering along in a hopeless attempt to extricate himself, when the justice, who never misses an opportunity to assist a tyro in difficulties, interrupted:

"If the learned counsel will go back and repeat a little of what he said I will be better able to pick up the thread of his argument."

"I noticed you couldn't rapidly stammered the young attorney. "It is a very complicated point of law, but if your honor will give me your close attention I will endeavor to make it so clear that even your honor can understand it."—N. Y. Times.

Carl Mueller, a thrifty German farmer living near Range, Texas, has discovered an inexpensive, and, so far as can be learned, a new method of dehorning cattle, or rather preventing the horns from coming out. His method is as follows: When the calf is three days old a thick solution of concentrated lye is applied to the spot where the horns will grow. A spot the size of a dime is all that is necessary, and one application is all that is needed. Mr. Mueller has a number of cattle on his farm that have been treated thus, and they appear as perfect specimens of the genuine muley. The only precaution to be taken is to protect the calves from rainy weather to prevent the solution from running and thus leaving an unsightly scar. He says that the calves do not seem to be inconvenienced to any material extent by the application of the lye, and he has 2 year-olds and even 4 year-olds that were thus treated, and which have never shown any ill effects from the treatment. Mr. Mueller mixes just enough water with the lye to make a thick dough and applies it with the finger, a feather, a soft pine stick or any other convenient means. He says a ten cent can is enough of the mixture to dehorn a herd of 200 calves, and is much cheaper and just as satisfactory as the methods usually employed.—Journal of Agriculture.

Saves A Woman' Life.

To have given up would have meant death for Mrs. Lois Cragg, of Dorchester, Mass. For years she had endured untold misery from a severe lung trouble and obstinate cough. "Often", she writes, "I could scarcely breathe and sometimes could not speak. All doctors and remedies failed till I used Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was completely cured." Sufferers from Coughs, Colds, Throat and Lung Trouble need this grand remedy, for it never disappoints. Cure is guaranteed by W. F. McKim, Burlington; Union Drug Store Union; J. G. A horse belonging to Mrs. Mary Kendall got one of its legs broken last Thursday, while working to a mower in W. J. Rice's meadow. Wood Maxwell, who was driving the machine did not know when the accident happened, the first warning he had being the inability of the horse to walk.

It behooves every Sunday school in the State to send delegates to this great convention and pay their way if necessary. Many of the best schools in the State are doing this. All delegates must receive credentials from the State Association through the county officers. Delegates will be entertained free during the convention. As soon as appointed the names of delegates who want entertainment should be sent to Mrs. T. C. Underwood, Hopkinsville, Ky. For particulars, address E. A. Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Same Old Story.

J. A. Kelly relates an experience similiar to that which has happened in almost every neighborhood in the United States and has been told and re told by thousands of others. He says: "Last summer I had an attack of dysentery and purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which I used according to directions and with entirely satisfactory results. The trouble was controlled much quicker than former attacks when I used other remedies." Mr. Kelly is a well known citizen of Henderson, N. C. For sale by all druggists.

Through the untiring efforts of Mrs. Lizzie Mason and other friends of Big Bone Grange, a most beautiful carpet has been placed on the floor of the spacious hall and other furnishings secured that give a feeling of homelike comfort.

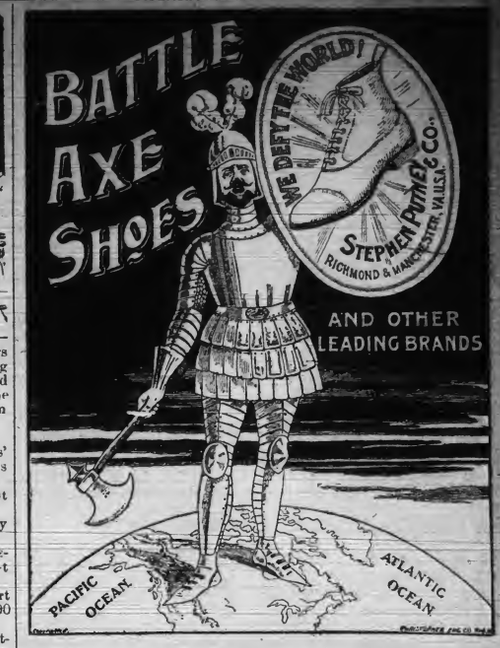
Go to bed in fresh clothing every night. Never think of allowing yourself to sleep in the clothing worn during the day. Not a stitch of it. Take everything off. Put on night clothing that has been thoroughly aired.

During the summer months when the body is sweating considerably, a quick, tepid bath before going to bed is a good thing. Keep the skin clean all the time. When you get up in the morning, take off everything again. This is the time to take a cold bath, very quickly, with vigorous rubbing. If, for any reason, you do not take the cold bath, rub your skin all over thoroughly with a rough towel. Don't be afraid of being naked a little while. There is no better tonic for the skin than nakedness. Take oft everything. Give yourself a little hand massage. Exercise the muscles. Rub your skin with a coarse towel, anything so as to spend a little time naked. Then put on fresh clothing.



People who wear the same clothes every night and day get themselves surrounded by an atmosphere of their own bodily emanations that is very unhealthy. Neither faith cures nor drug cures are of a particle of use to dirty people.

Cleanliness is the first law of health. If this law be broken, it will be very little use to try any remedy.

We clip the following from an exchange to which we say amen and amen:

It is as easy to be a rich man as a poor one. Half the energy displayed in keeping ahead that is required to catch up when behind would save credit, give more time to attend to business, and to the profit and reputation of those who work for gain. If you promise to meet a man or to do a thing at a certain moment, be ready at the appointed time. If you go in business, attend promptly to matters on hand then as promptly go about your own business. Do not stop to tell stories in business hours. If you have a place of business be found there when wanted. No man can get rich by standing around stoves. Have order, system, regularity, promptness and liberality. Do not meddle with business you know nothing of; never buy an article you do not need just because it is cheap, and the man who sells it will take it out in trade. Trade is money. Strive to avoid harsh words and personalities. Do not kick every stone in the path; more miles can be made in a day by going steadily on than by stopping to kick. Pay as you go. A man of honor respects his word as he does his bond. Aid, but never beg. Help others when you can, but never give what you can not afford to, simply because it is fashionable. Learn to say no. No necessity for snapping it out in dog-fashion, but say it firmly, respectfully. Have but few confidants, and the fewer the better. Use your own brains rather than those of others. Learn to think and act for yourself. Be vigilant. Keep ahead rather than behind the time. Cut this out, and if there be folly in the argument, let us know.

Resolutions of Respect.

At a meeting of Golden Grange, No. 346, Union, Ky., July 25, 1902, the following resolutions were adopted:

Since it has been the will of the Divine Master to call to "Fields Elysian," little Frank Thornton Tanner, son of Robert E. and Shelby Youell Tanner, therefore, be it resolved:—

1. We extend the deepest fraternal sympathy to Bro. and Sister Tanner, in this time of lonely grief, and point them to the "wideness of God's mercy" as the only solace for such trials.

2. We pray that the tender memories of this child of their patient, loving affection, may draw them very near to the feet of Jesus, and that they may become as this little child, fit for the Kingdom of Heaven.

THE PRESIDENT IN NEW JERSEY.

He Received a Heartfelt and Patriotic Welcome at Sea Girt.

Sea Girt, N. J., July 25.—No president ever received a more sincere, heartfelt and patriotic welcome than that accorded Thursday to President Roosevelt by the people of New Jersey. From the time he landed on New Jersey soil at Atlantic Highlands pier at 1:35 Thursday afternoon until he left in his launch for the war yacht Mayflower, anchored several miles off the pier, at 3:15, he was the recipient of a continuous ovation.

The president, on invitation of Gov. Franklin Murphy, extended through Senator Kean, visited the encampment of the 24 brigade of the national guard of the state at Sea Girt.

The president and party left Sagamore Hill at 7 o'clock Thursday morning and boarded the Mayflower, his official naval vessel from a launch. The run to within sight of Atlantic Highlands was made in five hours, but the vessel came to anchor there, as the water was too shallow to admit of her approaching the pier. Just as she anchored the French liner la Savoie, with Secretary Root, Gen. Horace Porter, ambassador to France, and Gen. Leonard Wood, on board, passed out to sea. As the big liner swept near the presidential vessel, the Mayflower fired a salute of 17 guns in honor of the secretary of war. The liner responded by dipping her colors while the passengers crowded her upper deck and cheered the president enthusiastically.

BY AN ANGRY MOB.

Two Unknown Negroes Were Lynched at Womelsdorf, W. Va.

Philippi, W. Va., July 25.—Two Negroes, whose names are unknown, were lynched at Womelsdorf, near here, by an angry mob, numbering several hundred. The first Negro was shot and killed in the station house and the second was taken to the park, where he was hanged and then riddled with bullets and cut to pieces.

Both whites and Negroes are enraged and in arms, and more trouble is hourly expected.

The trouble grows out of the murder of Chief Bud Wilmoth Wednesday. Several other arrests have been made, and lynching seemed imminent on every side.

The dead Negroes were caught near Belington and were locked up, the officers fearing a lynching if they were taken to Elkins. When arrested neither of the men gave his name. Negroes are leaving on every train. The lynched men were horribly mutilated and their bodies were left on the commons.

THE INCENDIARY FIRES.

It Is Believed to Be the Work of Recruits Who Are Tired of Army Life.

Astoria, Ore., July 25.—Army officers here express the belief that the incendiary fires discovered during the past week at Fort Stevens were the work of recruits who have become tired of army life. The services of detectives have been engaged and a systematic search has been begun by the government to arrest the guilty persons. While the damage was nominal, there is little doubt that a tremendous explosion would have wrecked the fort had the fire reached the arsenal.

WENT OVER A TRESTLE

One Person Killed Outright, One Died Later and 25 Were More or Less Injured, Some of Whom Will Not Survive.

McConnellsville, O., July 25.—The worst wreck in the history of Muskingum valley occurred Thursday at the Duddi trestle, a mile south of this city. The northbound passenger train on the Ohio & Little Kanawha railway was passing over the trestle when the rear coach turned over twice in its descent and fell 40 feet. It is stated that the trestle had been weakened by the recent flood. The train was going at the ordinary speed over the trestle when the rear coach fell and there was no damage to any part of it except the coach which fell, and it was smashed into splinters. There were 30 passengers in the coach, nearly all of them from local points along the Muskingum valley, as the train was bound from Marietta to Zanesville.

Following is a complete list of the dead and injured:

The dead—Miss Gertrude Sherwood, Pattens Mills, O; A. J. Rathbun, of Columgus, prominent oil man.

The injured—Edward J. Herman, Zanesville, cut about head; Wm. N. Warner, Zanesville, fracture of the arm and shoulder; Chester Harris, Zanesville, bruised about head and body; Charles Bailey, Marietta, O., ribs broken, injured internally, condition very serious; Harry Bailey, Marietta, O., face, neck and shoulders bruised; Mrs. H. R. Postal, Columbus, bruised about shoulders, severe scalp wound; Howard B. Speer, Marietta, O., struck on head, left forearm broken; Miss Martha Brown, Parkersburg, head and face and ankle injured; Carl Wright, Sharpsburg, O., injured about head and internally; Wm. Duffy, Higginsport, O., side bruised; Wm. S. Lightner, Megsville, O., skull crushed; condition very serious; Miss Elsie Rosier, Marietta, O., face and side bruised; Daniel Gillespie, Malta, O., head and neck bruised; C. E. Myers, Chicago, side bruised, wrist broken and ankle sprained; Norma Rathbun, Columbus, O., head bruised; Mabel Rathbun, Columbus, O., slightly bruised about head and shoulders; Miss Lucy Brigham, Marietta, O., bruised about head, shoulders and side; Dr. J. Flory, Elgin, Ill., badly injured about hips; Robert James, Pennsville, O., scalp wound and hurt internally; John O'Neill, Marietta, O., face bruised; A. S. Tilden, Garrettsville, O., bruised about face and body; Edward Smith, Malta, O., dangerously injured internally

TWO TRAINS COLLIDE.

Engineer and Six Passengers Burned to Death—Others Injured.

Dayton, O., July 25.—Engineer Clark, of Xenia, under his engine, burned to a crisp; his fireman, of Cincinnati, name unknown, head crushed, right arm broken and both legs cut off; three passengers, two women and a man, burned to death in a Pullman sleeper and a number of other passengers injured, how many can not at this hour be learned, is the awful story of the wrecking of the Pan-Handle limited, from St. Louis eastbound to New York, Thursday night, at Trebeins Station, a way stop a short distance from Xenia. A wrecking train was hurried out from Xenia and another from this city with all the doctors that could be secured.

Xenia, O., July 26.—The latest developments in the wreck of the Pennsylvania train at Trebeins show that the worst fears about the number of killed have not been realized. Up to 6 o'clock only four, Engineer Clark, Fireman Dwyer, Mail Clerks Peters and McGowan, are known dead. Neither has there been any additional injured discovered.

One of the most thrilling chapters of the railway wreck is that which deals with the escape of the runaway car in the yards here. When Yardmaster Sullivan saw that the brakes would not work he jumped from the car, which had not attained any great speed, and attempted to throw the switch by which it would be put into a siding. But he failed in this and then made an effort to catch the car again. Finding that his efforts to stop the car were fruitless, Sullivan then came back and notified the yard engine and a wild chase of nearly three miles ensued in an effort to overtake the car. But this also failed, the car having attained such speed and such a start that all efforts in this direction were of no avail. It is estimated that the coal car must have been running at the speed of 70 miles an hour and the train approaching at about the same speed when the crash occurred. Scarcely a trace of the car is to be found. The engine and tank lie a hundred feet beyond the point where the wreck occurred.

Submarine Volcano Eruption.

Lisbon, July 25.—A dispatch from the Azores Islands says there has just been a terrific submarine volcanic eruption off Horta, Island of Fayal. A great rock, incandescent with heat, was thrown up. The people were panic-stricken.

Middletown, N. Y., July 25.—A passenger train on the Ellenville branch of the Ontario & Western railroad has fallen down an embankment owing to a washout. Several persons were injured.

TWO BIG BATTLESHIPS.

Plans for the Louisiana and Connecticut Will Be Ready August 1.

Washington, July 26.—The circulars for the two new battleships, the Connecticut and Louisiana, were issued by the navy department. Plans will be ready August 1, when the advertisement for bids for the Louisiana will be published. The Connecticut will be built in the New York navy yard. The bids will be opened about October 1. The maximum time for construction of the Louisiana is 42 months. For any delay beyond the contract time the builders are to forfeit $300 per day therafter. In considering bids preference will be given to the bidder who offers to construct the ship in the shortest time. The speed of the ship is to be 18 knots. If it falls below that limit $50,000 is to be deducted from the contract price for each quarter knot down to 17 knots and $100,000 for each quarter knot below the latter figure down to 16½ knots. If the ship fails to make 16½ knots the secretary of the navy can reject her at his discretion.

In a general way it can be said that the Louisiana and the Connecticut will be of the same type as the battleships Georgia and New Jersey. They will measure 450 feet on the load line and will have an extreme width of 76 feet and 10 inches. The main draught will be 24 feet 5 inches and coaling capacity 2,200 tons. The main batteries will consist of four 12-inch, eight 8-inch and twelve 7-inch guns with a secondary battery of twenty 3-inch rapid-fire guns and some smaller semi-automatic guns. The hull will be protected by a complete belt of 9-inch armor. The maximum 11-inch armor will extend 200 feet amidships, forward and aft of which will be 9-inch armor to protect the magazines and decreasing the thickness gradually to four inches at the stem and stern. The casemate armor will be six inches thick. The armor is to be supplied by the government. The constructors are to finish the steel for the protective deck, which is to extend from stem to stern, flat amidships and sloping at the sides.

CHICKAMAUGA POST.

Washington, July 26.—A board of officers consisting of Maj. Walter S. Schuyler, 2d cavalry; Maj. Jefferson R. Kean, medical department, and Capt. Herbert J. Slocum, 7th cavalry, has been appointed to select a site for the new military post at Chickamauga, Ga. The board held informal meetings to receive instructions from the quartermaster's department as to size and number of buildings and other necessary appurtenances. The military post will be north of the present military national park. The board looked over various plans for a fort. It will be decided that the water for the men shall be derived from driven wells, a plentiful supply being obtained at 90 feet. The men now stationed there are thus supplied, while the horses are supplied from Chickamauga creek.

Most important problem the board will have before it is the disposition of sewage, but this, it is expected, to overcome by the use of septic tanks, a plan that has been found very satisfactory at Santiago.

The board will go to Chickamauga to complete its work before reporting to the secretary of war.

POSTAGE AND SPECIAL STAMPS.

Post Office Department Advertises For Bids For Printing.

Washington, July 26.—The post office department has advertised for bids for printing the postage and special stamps for the government to be supplied to post offices throughout the country during the next fiscal year. The action is the result of what the postal officials term an unreasonable and excessive price asked by the bureau of engraving and printing, which has been doing the work for years. The call may raise an issue as to the right of a government office to contract with outside interests for work that can be done by another branch of the government. Controller of the Treasury Tracewell recently decided that all printing for the government departments must be done at the government printing offices until otherwise provided by law and that the law impliedly prohibits the departments from procuring printing not otherwise provided for to be done elsewhere. It is said that the transfer of the work to an outsider would result in laying off a large number of employes of the bureau of engraving and printing.

Talk of Annexation.

Kingston, Jamaica, July 26.—All the planters of the larger West Indian islands are talking of annexation to the United States owing to their dissatisfaction over the small amount of money contributed by the imperial government to help the sugar industry. The newspapers reject the idea, but the annexation feeling is evidently growing among the planters.

To Aid Korea.

Cologne, July 26.—The Gazette Friday states that England and Japan have undertaken to assist Korea by word and deed to preserve her independence. Korea, the paper says, is undertaking to raise her army to a high defensive strength.

JAMES JEFFRIES WON.

Knocked Out Bob Fitzsimmons in the Eighth Round.

When Fitz Had Sufficiently Recovered to Talk He Said, "I Will Never Fight Again; the Fight Was Won Fairly."

San Francisco, July 26.—After fighting a battle of eight rounds that was fraught with brilliant and courageous work, Robert Fitzsimmons Friday night forfeited his last claim upon the heavyweight championship. He was knocked out after he had so badly punished the champion that it was a foregone conclusion among the spectators that the Cornishman must win. Bleeding from a number of gashes in the face, apparently weakening, and clearly unable to cope with Fitzsimmons' superior skill, Jeffries delivered two lucky punches as Fitzsimmons paused in his fighting to speak to him, and turned the tide. The battle was brief, but noteworthy, and will live in pugilistic history.

Fitzsimmons tried once to rise from the mat, but sank down again in helplessness and heard himself counted out, where but a moment before he had apparently all the better of it.

"I will never fight again," said the battle-scarred veteran of the ring, when he had sufficiently recovered to talk. "The fight was won fairly, and to the best man belongs the laurels."

"You are the most dangerous man alive," said Jeffries in return, "and I consider myself lucky to have won when I did."

Fitzsimmons had been fighting at a furious gait, cool and deliberate, and chopping the champion to pieces with the terrific rights and lefts that have made him famous. When the men came together Fitzsimmons appeared rather worried, but upon the opening of the first round he assumed an air of absolute confidence, and fought with the greatest deliberation.

As early as the second round Fitz had Jeffries bleeding profusely from the mouth and nose. Again and again he landed on his bulky opponent, getting away in such a clever manner that he roused the big crowd to enthusiastic cheering. It seemed indeed that Jeffries could scarcely stand the pace. But the eighth round came, and after a series of hot exchanges Fitzsimmons paused with his guard down and spoke to the champion. The latter's reply was two terrific blows that saved him the championship and removed the veteran Fitzsimmons from the fistic arena. Fitzsimmons took his defeat with good cheer. He walked to the center of the ring and raising his hand addressed the multitude, saying:

"The best man won. Had I beaten Jeffries to-night, I would have conceded him the championship and then forever retired. I retire just the same now, but without having accomplished my ambition. I am satisfied."

Champion Jeffries was seen in his dressing room after the battle and said:

"Well, I have won, just as I expected to. It was a fierce fight, the fiercest I ever had, but I won. Yes, I got a good beating as far as the marks of battle count, but then I rather expected that. I knew Fitzsimmons had a cutting punch and would land it at some time of the fight. But the few marks and the loss of a little blood wont hurt a man. I took them and only waited for the opportunity to land my punch. I found out Fitzsimmons could not jar me, even with his famous right.

"He cut me up, of course, but that did not hurt. I never was tired at any stage, and was stronger than Fitzsimmons at all stages. You saw that he wore heavy bandages. Fitzsimmons certainly is a wonder. He is the greatest fighters of his weight that ever lived. As old as he is, he is the shiftiest and cleverest, the hardest hitting man I ever met, and I want to give him credit, as I know all who saw it will, for the great fight he put up. I have no plans for the immediate future, as I have not thought of anything but this fight for some time and won't do anything for a long period. I will take a rest after the long siege of hard training.

"I think Fitzsimmons can yet defeat any other man than myself."

Fitzsimmons was cheerful in the face of defeat and full of praise for his vanquisher. Writhing in pain on his couch, surrounded by a score of friends offering their consolations, the defeated veteran, between short sentences, interspersed with groans, announced that he had fought his last battle. He said:

"I fought the best I could and the best man won. He is a great fighter, and had I been awarded the decision to-night I would have turned around and given him the championship for he is the only man in the world capable of defending it. The blows that put me out were a left short arm jolt under the ribs and a right to the jaw. After receiving the terrific body blow I knew I was gone and told Jeffries to keep away, but he was anxious to finish me, and sent a right swing to my jaw."

HELD IN CONTEMPT.

Secretary Wilson, of the Mine Workers, to Be Arrested.

The Judge Suspended Judgment in the Case of "Mother" Jones—The Conviction, However, Is Still Held Over Her.

Parkersburg, W. Va., July 25.—Judge Jackson, in the United States district court, Thursday held "Mother" Jones and seven other organizers of the United Mine Workers and a number of Hungarian miners guilty of contempt in violating his injunction order of June 19 and passed sentences on them of from 60 to 90 days in jail with the exception of "Mother" Jones and the Hungarians. The latter, claiming they did not understand the injunction, were released upon promise not to violate it again.

Judge Jackson suspended judgment in the case of "Mother" Jones in the contempt case. He stated she had been found guilty of contempt, but as she was posing as a martyr he would not send her to jail or allow her to force her way into jail. He said he would hold the conviction over her and if she again violated the injunction he would sentence her heavily. Thomas Haggerty got 90 days, and five others got 60 days each in the Parkersburg jail.

It was currently reported that the house of Judge Jackson had been guarded for several nights and that guards were in the courtroom. It is stated that this was done without the knowledge of the judge. There was intense interest shown by everyone as Judge Jackson earnestly read his decision. "Mother" Jones was surrounded by other defendants and Vice President Lewis, of the United Mine Workers, was present with them. The defendants were surprised at both the decision and the sentences and expressed themselves hitterly.

Counsel for the imprisoned miners are preparing papers for habeas corpus proceedings in the United States circuit court of appeals at Richmond, Va., alleging Judge Jackson had no jurisdiction in the cases of "Mother" Jones and her associates. The counsel says the proceedings here were brought not by the Clarksburg Fuel Co., but by a bondholder, and for that reason an ouster will be asked.

While the sentences given Thursday are considered severe, it is anticipated that Judge Jackson will deal firmly with W. B. Wilson, secretary of the United Mine Workers, who has also been held in contempt, but who is at his headquarters in Indianapolis. District Attorney Blizzard Thursday filed an affidavit that Secretary W. B. Wilson violated the restraining order of June 19 by making an inflammatory speech at Clarksburg July 7, and another at Fairmont July 8, and asked the court for his arrest. Judge Jackson made the order that Wilson be arrested and brought within the jurisdiction of his court.

Thomas Haggerty, who was given 90 days, was a prominent organizer. He lives at Reynoldsville, Pa. Rice and Morgan are also organizers and members of the board of United Mine Workers. Rice lives in Dubois, Pa., and Morgan in Massillon, O. These organizers and others were working with the miners of West Virginia when Judge Jackson issued his order. The prisoners have been distributed among the jails of a half dozen or more counties.

Indianapolis, Ind., July 25.—Secretary Wilson, of the National Mine Workers, said Thursday night he had received no official knowledge of a warrant having been issued for him in West Virginia for contempt of court.

Wilson is now waiting the appearance of a deputy marshal from that state to take him before Judge Jackson, whose injunction he is charged with violating.

Mr. Wilson says he is perfectly willing to return to West Virginia if he is wanted, as he has done no wrong and is not afraid to meet any just charges. The speeches he says were mere peaceful appeals to the men to stand by their cause.

Warrant for Wilson Held Up.

Parkersburg, W. Va., July 26.—Judge Jackson and District Attorney Blizzard gave instructions Friday to Marshal Elliott not to execute the orders for the arrest of W. B. Wilson, secretary of the United Mine Workers, now in Indianapolis, on charges of disobeying the injunction.

The reason for the decision not to arrest Wilson and bring him here is due to the desire not to arouse more bitterness. The charge against him will be held up, and if he should come to the Fairmont district to take an active part an arrest on this warrant will be made.

CHINA ACCEPTS IT.

Commercial Treaty Between Great Britain and the Chinese.

Shanghai, July 28.—The draft of the commercial treaty between Great Britain and China has been conditionally accepted by the Chinese government, but clause 8, dealing with the abolition of the Likin still awaits the approval of the British government. This clause provides that, in retura for a surtax equivalent to one and one-half times the duty leviable under the protocol of 1901, China shall abolish all likin dues, stations and barriers and every form of internal taxation on British goods, guaranteeing them against exactions and delays.

Other articles deal with the registration of trade marks, the navigation of the Yangtse and Canton rivers, bonded warehouses, the equalization of duties on junks and steamers, facilities for drawbacks, the establishment of a national currency, the revision of the mining regulations, new regulations for the navigation of inland waters, the opening of Kong Mun as a treaty port on the West river and the appointment of joint commissions to settle disputes.

In article 12 Great Britain agrees to relinquish her extra territorial rights when the reform of the Chinese judicial system and the establishment of an effective administration shall warrant so doing.

By article 13 Great Britain agrees hereafter to participate in a joint commission, if such be formed, representing China and the treaty powers, with the object of investigating the missionary question and devising means to secure peaceful relations between Christians and non-converts.

Article 8 shall become elective in January, 1904, subject to the other powers entering similar agreements and China agrees on the same date to open four new treaty ports—Chang Sha, Nganking, Wan Hsien and Wai Chou. China retains unimpaired the right to tax salt, native opium and native produce for internal consumption.

The Police of Manila Forbade the Holding of a Procession.

At the conclusion of the meeting, which was not largely attended, owing to the storm which prevailed, the crowd dispersed quietly.

WOMEN TOOK PART.

Clerical and Anti-Clerical Demonstrations in Paris.

Thought Many Fights Occurred During the Day They Never Became General, Nor Was Any Person Seriously Injured.

Paris, July 28.—The demonstration made Sunday in connection with the decree of Premier Combes ordering the closing of the Congregationalist schools proved to be quite as much of a manifestation in support of the government as of opposition to its anti-clerical measures. The crowd which gathered in the Place de la Concorde numbered 15,000 persons, while as many more thronged the Champs-Elysees. The clerical and anti-clerical forces about equally divided the gatherings. The former were distinguishable by the red, white and blue paper flowers which they wore, while the latter sported red eglantines.

Though many fights occurred, they never became general, nor was any person seriously injured. An imposing force of police and mounted municipal guards had much trouble in keeping the manifestants constantly moving, and at times they were forced to charge to prevent the crowd becoming too dense. On the whole, the crowds were good natured and mainly confined themselves to shouting "Liberty, Liberty!" "Long live the Sisters!" and "We want the Sisters!" To which the anti-clericals replied: "Vive le Republique!" and "Down with the priests!" The occasional appearance of a priest was a signal for much hooting and several fights were due to their presence.

A striking feature of the manifestations was the large number of women; many of them well dressed, who actively participated. Nor were these all clerical in their sympathies, for the anti-clerical women were also out in strong force and they occasionally made things lively for their clerical sisters whom the police had some difficulty in protecting. In one instance a detachment of mounted guards had to rescue three well-dressed ladies from the hands of a group of socialist women who were bent on mobbing them.

The clericals made several attempts to reach the Place Beauvieu on which the Elysee and the ministry of the interior are situated, but were prevented from doing so by strong cordons of police and municipal guards which were stationed at all the approaches in order to prevent demonstrations in front of these buildings.

The demonstrations culminated when a group of 30 ladies, some in carriages and some on foot, headed by Mesdames Reille DeMun, Cihiel and De Pommerol, attempted to reach the ministry of the interior in order to present to Premier Combes a petition on behalf of the sisters.

The police, however, refused to allow them to pass. Subsequently the clericals made an angry rush on the cordon guarding the Avenue Gabrielle and the soldiers had to use the butts of their guns to keep back the crowd.

Another violent incident occurred on the Champs Elysees where the crowd began throwing the small iron chairs bordering the sidewalks among the feet of the horses of the mounted guards. One horse fell, injuring his rider. A number of prominent nationalists, including Deputies Millevoye and Auffray and several municipal councillors were conspicuous in the crowd and were much ovated by their followers and were hooted by the anti-clericals. By 7 o'clock Sunday evening the crowd began to thin out and an hour later the place de la Concorde and the Champs Elysees had resumed their customary appearance. A light shower hastened the dispersal of the manifestants. About 100 arrests were made.

The fact that throughout the day vehicular traffic was not interrupted shows how well the police handled the great, unruly crowd with which they had to deal.

Atlantic City, N. J., July 28.—Chas. M. Schwab, president of the United States steel corporation, who is spending a few days with his family at his cottage here, is somewhat annoyed by stories printed Sunday to the effect that he was seized with a serious illness Saturday night.

Mr. Schwab arrived Saturday afternoon from New York. During the evening he became suddenly ill, and the physician who has been attending his family was called. The patient remained in bed until about noon Sunday when he arose, and, after dressing himself, sat for a while on the porch of his cottage. There were so many telegrams and personal inquiries regarding his condition, however, that he soon retired in doors and denied himself to newspaper reporters and other callers. Mr. Schwab expects to return to his New York office in two or three days.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

Charles Weyley Shot His Former Sweetheart and Then Himself.

Springfield, Mo., July 28.—Charles Weyley, aged 25, of Norwood, Mo., shot and killed Miss Josephine Sheridan, his former sweetheart, at her home here and then shot and killed himself. Miss Sheridan and her sister were entertaining friends in the back yard when Weyley rang the door bell. Miss Sheridan went through the house to the front door and almost immediately four shots were heard. When members of the family reached the spot a minute later, both the girl and Weyley were dead stretched side by side on the porch. Miss Sheridan had been shot through the heart while the top of Weyley's head had been torn off. Jealousy probably prompted Weyley to shoot Miss Sheridan and then himself. They had known each other for four years and up to a month ago had been engaged to be married.

STATE NEWS PICK-UPS.

WORK OF SAFEBLOWERS.

They Started a $100,000 Fire in Owensboro, Ky.—Fully Insured.

Owensboro, Ky., July 24.—At 4 o'clock Wednesday morning fire broke out in the Osborn planing mill, on South Allen street, and raged for three hours, destroying the mill, the Continental tobacco factory and a number of freight cars that were standing on a siding. Citizens living in the neighborhood hurriedly moved out of their homes and had their effects taken to other parts of the city. For a time it looked as if that whole section of the city would surely go. The city had a special train dispatched from Henderson, Ky., and Evansville, Ind., with aid, but succeeded in getting control of the fire before the train arrived. The loss is estimated at $100,000, fully insured. The Continental Leaf Tobacco Co.'s loss is $30,000; the Osborn Co.'s, $30,000; cars burned, $10,000. Fire Chief Tennes became exhausted and was carried home unconscious, but will recover. The origin of the fire is unknown, but it is supposed to have been started by a passing freight train.

It develops that the Osborn mill was fired by safeblowers, who had blown the safe, securing about $100. They then went to Joseph Strehl's grocery and blew open the safe and secured $15. The sheriff and a posse, with bloodhounds on the trail, tracked them down the L. H. & St. L. railroad.

She went to the express office, paid the charges, took the jug, and smashed it in the presence of a large crowd. Louisville, Ky., July 26.—Society here was surprised Friday when Bryan H. Allen and Mrs. Rebecca Daniel Allen were married at the bride's home. Three years ago the young couple eloped to Jeffersonville and were married. They failed to agree and a divorce followed. A few weeks ago Mrs. Allen's mother died. Mr. Allen sought his former wife to tender his sympathy. The result was that they were reconciled.

State News.

Harry Ennis killed a rattlesnake near Bowling Green which weighed 32 pounds.

Horace Lane, a boy 15 years of age, who weighed 355 pounds, died in Ballard county, of typhoid fever. He was thought to be the largest boy of his age in the State.

The Treasury Department is preparing to send to the Treasurer of the State of Kentucky a warrant for $25,000 under authority of the Morrill act of 1890, which provides for an annual appropriation of this sum to be expended by agricultural and mechanical colleges in each State.

The total value of property subject to taxation in Kentucky, as equalized by the State Board of Equalization, is $598,829,633. On this the State will this year, at 50 cents on the $100, collect $2,994,148.16. This valuation is an increase over the work of the County Assessors of $11,055,855, they having reported to the Auditor a valuation of $587,763,778, after the deduction of all exemptions. Last year the valuation, as reported by Assessors, was $579,084,534, showing an increase by them this year of $8,680,244. The valuation, as equalized by the State Board last year, was $589,155,820, showing an increase this year over last year of $9,672,813, and the amount of tax collected last year was $1,798,494.87 which is $195 653.20 less than will be collected this year under the increased tax rate.

Crop and Stock.

Oats crop in Scott county fine. Wheat yielded from 10 to 30 bushels per acre and sold for 76 cents.

At Centralia, Mo., 128 corn fed cattle, to be delivered the last half of August, sold at $8 a hundred pounds.

W. C. Terhune, of Harrodsburg, has bought 100 head of mule colts at prices ranging from $40 to $60 per head. He also bought 40 yearling mules at an average of $55 per head.

Capt. W. E. Lyen sold his Harrodsburg and Shakertown pike farm containing 150 acres, to Rufus and Henry Vanarsdall, neighboring farmers, for $135 an acre. It is hemp and tobacco land, and has produced 2,200 pounds of tobacco to the acre. This is the highest price ever obtained for farming land in Mercer county.

"The corn crop, as a whole, in the principal corn states has made very favorable progress, although needing cultivation in portions of the Missouri and upper Mississippi valleys and lake regions as a result of continued rains which have also reduced the acreage somewhat in Iowa. In the southern states late corn has improved somewhat, but the early crop is very poor. In New England, New York and North Dakota corn is very backward.

A good spring in a field is always valuable. It will pay to put it in order by cleaning it out, enlarging the storage capacity by walling in, and covering to protect from sun and washes of dirt from the land. It is better to make a box or trough just below the spring, arranging a pipe, covered, to supply the water for the use of the stock. If they drink from the spring it cannot be properly protected and if it is not, the stock are liable to tramp in it and do damage.

A wholesale vegetable dealer said that he had received inside information regarding the melon crop in Indiana and gives it as his opinion that it will be immense. The melon raisers in the south part of the state have planted a larger acreage this year than ever before and now that the weather since planting has been especially favorable for melon culture, the yield promises to exceed that of any previous year in the past. This dealer thinks that choice Indiana melons will sell at a nickle apiece before the season is half over. —Lebanon Reporter.

A traveler in Norway says that the horses in that country have a very sensible way of taking their food which might be beneficially followed here. They have a bucket of water put down beside their allowance of hay. It is interesting to see with what relish they take a sip of one and a mouthful of the other alternately, sometimes moistening their mouths as a rational being would while eating his dinner of such dry food. A broken winded horse is scarcely ever seen in Norway, and the question is if the mode of feeding has not something to do with the preservation of the animal's respiratory organs.

Rust in wheat may be prevented by destroying the spores in the seed. One plan is to soak the seed in a solution made by dissolving a pound of sulphate of copper in ten gallons of hot water, allowing the seed to remain in the solution twenty-four hours, then drying the seed with fine land plaster and sowing or drilling as soon as dry. Wheat that showed indications of rust last year should be avoided, however, and new seed procured. It should also be planted in a different field from that on which wheat was grown last year.

An Osgood girl visited a cooking school recently and her attention was divided between a dress worn by a friend and directions for making cake. So when she undertook to write the receipt for her mother, the old lady was paralyzed to read the following: "Take two pounds of flour, three rows of plaiting down the front, the whites of two eggs cut bias, a pint of milk ruffled round the neck, half pound currants, with seven yards of bead trimming, grated lemon peel with lace fichu; stir well and add a semi-fitting paletot with visite sleeves; garnish with icing and passementerie. Bake in a moderately hot oven until the skirt is tucked from the waist down on either side, and finish with large satin rosettes."—Osgood Journal.

While various crops are grown as catch crops in seasons when other crops are short, it is generally considered that corn or sorghum or both are the most satisfactory. Both the ordinary field corn and sweet corn are sure crops, as a rule, for the seed may be sown even as late as this date and furnish much good feed before frost even in latitudes where it will not mature. Farmers should especially look into the merits of sweet corn as a catch crop; it develops more rapidly than field corn and all stock are immensely fond it it, particularly if they have been used to field corn. Sorghum may be sown at this time and will be found generally satisfactory as a catch crop both in the matter of growth and in the resulting crop. Of course if one is more familiar with the growing of rye, millet or other grains as catch crops these will answer very well, but under ordinary conditions, the chief reliance should be placed on corn.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOL. XXVII. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 6, 1902. NO. 42.

HEBON.—On Wednesday of last week, at the church here, occurred one of the prettiest events ever held there; a double wedding, at which Dr. Cecil Hafer claimed for his bride Miss Katherine Crigler, and Mr. Wallace Tanner for his, Miss Ora Rouse.

At exactly 3:45 p. m. to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, the two little flower girls, Ruth Slater and Gladys Rouse, followed by Miss Ora Rouse, with her friend, Miss Carrie Clore, and Miss Katherine Crigler with her sister, Miss Bessie, on one side of the church, Mr. Wallace Tanner, with his attendant, Walter Hafer, and Dr. Cecil Hafer with his brother, Clyde Hafer, on the otherside, marched to the altar, where they were met by their pastor, Rev. Slater, and were united in holy matrimony, after which they left the altar, still keeping step to the music as the flower girls strewed the aisle with flowers. Both brides looked exceedingly pretty in their white dresses trimmed in satin ribbon and lace. Both carried beautiful sheaves of flowers. The grooms looked handsome and proud in their couventional black.

Those who decorated the church deserve special compliments, as it never looked so beautiful.

A reception was given that evening at Mr. Jacob Rouse's, and the following evening at Mr. J. W. Crigler's.

There seems to be considerable attractions for Robert Gaines, near here.

Lemonade and ice cream social at Nick Fleek's last Saturday night. All report a pleasant time.

W. T. Ryle and wife, went to Rising Sun, last week, and purchased a new buggy for their son, Ira. Price, $65.

Ira Artis and Stella Ryle attended the chicken soup social, Tuesday night at Camp Cottonwood, on the river above Bellevue landing.

Idlewild, when we thanked you for the compliment paid us and expressed our desire to meet you at the fair, we thought you to be a gentleman. Your being a lady of 60 and married, does not lessen our desire to make your acquaintance, as well as that of each of the other correspondents of this paper.

We had the pleasure of a ride with Ed Botts a few days ago, behind his sorrel saddle and harness mare, Lady Roosevelt. Ed was on his way home, and we got in at our place of business. When we were opposite Mrs. Scott's residence, he stopped, adjusted the lines, placed himself in a Budd Doble position, handed us his watch, and said, "notice the time." We asked why, and he replied, "I am going to beat Commodore Roseberry's time." The word was given and away we went, arriving at Eugene Kelly's gate, in 1½ seconds better than the Commodore made over the same road. Ed smiled and said, "the Commodore is a good one, but he is no stepper to Lady Roosevelt, and on a good track the time they would make would surprise the natives."

We have been feeling quite indisposed for three or four weeks—about as bad as the last end of a misspent life. High living productive of pain, and it becomes necessary, occasionally, for us to take a few days recreation among friends, so as to get coarser and more common grub, as a preventive. Last Saturday morning we wended our way over into Ind., and spent two days and three nights with our old friend, Popham, and McAtee. Found the folks well. Saturday night and Sunday until 3 p. m. was spent with Mr. Popham's family, and Sunday night, Monday and that night, with Mr. McAtee. We were up South Fegen 6 miles and North Fegen, 9 miles. The prospect for a large yield of corn in the bottoms of both streams is good; but if the farmers had chopped out ½ the corn now standing, they would have raised 1 3 more corn. Wheat averaged 20 bushels per acre. In going from Rabbit Hash to Aptown we went up the hill across to the Wilmington pike. We came to the pike a mile and a half beyond Wilmington, a beautiful town, and which has been the county seat of Dearbon county twice. The old courthouse and jail are standing, reminding the passerby of her departed glory. Monday we met Mrs. John Kirkpatrick, son and daughter, near Sparta. She was returning from a visit to her father's at Moreshill, also met and had a pleasant chat with a Mr. Johnson, a brother-in-law to Geo. Voshell. Monday afternoon we spent in fishing in Lake McAtee. If we had caught the one that bit, and two more, we would have caught three. All in all we had a very pleasant time.

CRESCENT, Aug. 4.—Mrs. Sarah Rector, Mrs. Laura Williams and Miss Clara Tanner, were calling on Mrs. Robt. Northcutt, Saturday.

Your correspondent was calling on Walter Garuett, of Hebron, Thursday.

Miss Ellen Rector, of Morgansville, spent Thursday with relatives near here.

Miss Mabel Huron spent several days, last week, with relatives near Point Pleasant.

Hubert Carpenter, the telegrapher at Bratch, spent Thursday with relatives at this place.

C. W. Hutchinson and family, of Williamstown, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Forsyth.

Several from here attended the sale at the residence of Mrs. Alice Tanner, near Gunpowder, Thursday.

Hiram Jefferson, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Rector, died, Sunday, July 27. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Adams, after which the remains were interred at Independence. The little one was ill only a few hours, when Death, the remorseless Reaper summoned its spirit to blossom in the fields of Light. To the bereaved parents we extend our deepest sympathy.

Capt. Ben Wilson is having the engines on his ferry boat repaired.

O. F. Craig sold his crop of Heglow apples at $4 per barrel in the city.

Several of our farmers are prizing their tobacco, with a view to shipping it.

The Grange entertainment last Saturday night was a great success, financially.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Wilson, who have been quite poorly, are about recovered.

The youngest child of Geo. Hillis and wife died last Sunday. George is in Florida.

John Hodges has the contract and is operating the water-works for Setters' machine.

E. L. Stephens' fine harness and saddle horse was cut, badly, on a wire a few days since.

John Calvert fell, while paintiug a barn, a few days ago, and has been quite lame ever since.

Much of the wheat shipped from here was docked, while some was rejected. Prices, 65 to 72 cents.

Robt. Clore has bought Mrs. Berkshire's residence, No. 1008 Busy Row, and has formed a partuership with J. R. Stephens and B. F. Mirrick to fight flies and run for the shade.

You fellows slipped up on us at the last primary for judge, giving us no chance to get out a candidate for the place, but we have our eyes on you now, and this precinct will present one or more candidates for each county office, next time. We are going for everything in sight, and give the incumbents timely warning to move out, and we do not want to hear any grumbling when we arrive with our force of officials. As an evidence of good faith we present our candidates, viz., J. P. Ryle, county judge or circuit clerk; Jas. McAtee, county clerk; Ira Pope, county attorney; G. W. Ward and R. H. Stephens, assessor; Gum Williamson, jailer; J. R. Stephens, surveyor; J. M. Hodges, representative; Moses Scott, sheriff.

RICHWOOD.—Hicks and Gaines have been buying sheaf oats at $8 per ton.

Price Conner is hustling with his thresher, this season.

Hay and grain are of good quality and abundant in quantity.

THE EARTH TREMBLED

Destructive Seismic Disturbances on the Pacific Coast.

That Section Was Shaken By a Series of Earthquakes That Is Without Precedent in the History of the Pacific Coast.

San Luis Obispo, Cal., Aug. 1.—A strip of country 15 miles long by four miles wide, rent with gaping fissures and dotted with hills and knolls that sprung up during the night as if by magic, a village in ruins and hundreds of people fleeing for their lives, are the results of Wednesday night's seismic disturbances in the prosperous and fruitful valley of Los Alamos, in the northern part of Santa Barbara county. During the last four days that section of the country has been shaken by a series of earthquakes that is without precedent in the history or tradition of the Pacific coast, and the continuance of the disturbances and the increasing severity of the shocks have so terrorized the luhabitants that they are leaving for other parts as rapidly as possible, and even now the village is almost entirely deserted.

Hills were shaken and twisted to their foundations and the valleys trembled and rolled like the unstable surface of the ocean. Great fissures were run deep in the earth, hills and knolls appeared in level valleys, springs of water appeared in many places that had been dry and the general topography of the valley was greatly changed in many respects.

With the first warning of the sound of the approaching disaster the terror-stricken people rushed into the streets and sought places of safety in vacant lots and roads, while many fled toward the neighboring hills. The first vibrations were similar to the preceding disturbances in direction and effect, but they were immediately followed by the most terrific shock ever experienced in this section of the state. The earth trembled and rolled and twisted until it was impossible for people to stand erect and the terror-stricken inhabitants crouched together in the darkness, fearful that the earth beneath them might open and swallow them. The terror inspired by the rumbling and trembling of the earth was increased by the sound of falling buildings which gave some idea of the terrible destruction that was being wrought. When the most serious shocks had passed and the rumbling sounds had died away in the distant hills, the people gathered in groups about the ruins of their homes and places of business and when they saw the extent of the damage done many of them, fearful of a repetition of this experience, immediately started on foot or by any conveyance that could be had for places where the previous shocks had been less severe.

In the darkness of the night it was impossible to determine the full extent of the damage wrought, but with the dawn of day the stricken village had the appearance of the ruins of a city long deserted. A church had been leveled to the ground and not one brick building was left standing. Chimneys had toppled over, frame buildings had been wrenched apart and thrown from their foundations. Telegraph and telephone wires had been broken and there was not a building in town that had not been damaged more or less seriously.

In store buildings that were totally destroyed the merchandise was thrown from shelves and everything breakable was destroyed; not a pane of glass was left in any window of any house in town and in these frame cottages and dwelling houses that were left standing stoves were overturned and crockery and glassware destroyed.

A conservative estimate of the loss to property in the village is $30,000, and this amount will probably be greatly increased by the damage done property in the surrounding country. Each merchant in town has lost at least $500 on stock and the damage to buildings has been great.

Santa Maria, Cal., Aug. 1.—Another earthquake shock was felt here at 7:25 p. m. Thursday. No damage was done. Two families arrived here Thursday afternoon from Los Alamos fleeing from the shocks almost continuously felt there. It is reported a reign of terror holds sway there, that more families are preparing to leave.

Santa Barbara, Cal., Aug. 1.—Another severe earthquake shock was felt at Los Alamos at 7:30 Thursday night. It was almost as heavy as that of early Thursday morning. A slight shock was felt in this city at the same time.

ANOTHER INJUNCTION.

President Mitchell, Secretary Wilson and Others Made Defendants.

Charleston, W. Va., Aug. 1.—President John Mitchell has been enjoined. A bill in equity has been filed in the federal court here by the Chesapeake & Ohio Coal Agency Co., a New Jersey corporation, which has its principal office in the city of New York, in which 50 coal companies operating in the New river fields, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., G. W. Purcell, W. B. Wilson, John Mitchell, J. W. Carroll, J. A. Richards and about one hundred and fifty members of the United Mine Workers of America are made defendants. The bill, which is a very lengthy one, was presented to Judge Keller Thursday morning and he made an order that a temporary restraining order be allowed, restraining the defendants, and all others associating or acting with them, from in any wise interfering with the management, operation or conducting of said mines by their owners or those operating them, either by menaces, threats or any character of intimidation used to prevent the employes of said mines from going to or from said mines and coke plants, or from engaging in the business of mining in said mines or laboring upon said plants.

TROUBLE ON THE MAYFLOWER.

Nine Desertions Occurred Among the Crew the Past Few Days.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Aug. 1.—Serious trouble has developed on the Mayflower, the president's official war yacht. During the past few days nine desertions have occurred among the crew. A member of the crew said Thursday that not less than 70 men on board the ship were awaiting a favorable opportunity after pay day to take "French leave" of the vessel. Primarily the trouble seems to revolve around the executive officer of the ship, Lieut. W. W. Phelps, who, the men assert, is overbearing and tyrannical. Ordinary privileges, it is alleged, have been curtailed seriously; the men are on watch eight hours and off four, and when on watch are kept hustling all the time; smoking is practically prohibited on board ship and shore leave is difficult to obtain. The men are proud to be aboard the president's official vessel, but they declare they can not endure the racking discipline forced upon them, not, they say, by Lieut. Commander Albert Gleaves, in command, but by Lieut. Phelps.

CHOLERA IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The Navy Department Is Now Alarmed Over the Situation There.

Washington, Aug. 1.—The navy department is now alarmed over the cholera situation in the Philippines. The men of the navy are not exposed as their brothers of the army are to infection of this character. The jackies aboard ship in time of infection are subjected to very stringent sanitary regulations. They are allowed to drink nothing but distilled water and their food is very carefully looked after. The cases of cholera which have occurred among men in the navy have been traced in almost every instance directly to the eating of native food or the drinking of water that has not been boiled. In this respect the soldiers in the Philippines, of course, disobey standing regulations, but in the navy it is well night impossible for sailors to evade a strict compliance with regulations.

HEAVY LOSS OF LIFE.

An Explosion in a Mine at Wollongong, N. S. W.

Sydney, N. S. W., Aug. 1.—An explosion resulting in heavy loss of life has occurred at the Mount Kimbla colliery at Wollongong, a port 40 miles from here. Twenty-seven bodies have been recovered. The buildings at the mouth of the pit were wrecked. One hundred and forty-nine miners were rescued, but a number are still entombed. It is feared their release is hopeless. A portion of the colliery is on fire.

A NEW ARMOR PLATE.

Navy People Hope to Offset New Developments in Explosives.

Lieut. Davis, By a Process, Can Produce a Face on the Plate as Hard as Glass and of Any Thickness Desired.

Washington, Aug. 2.—The navy people hope to offset the recent development in high explosives and armor piercing projectiles by the army through a considerable improvement in the resisting power of the armor plating of battleships.

Lieut. Cleland Davis, attached to the naval ordnance bureau, has produced an armor plate which recently was tested at the proving grounds at Bethlehem, and the results encourage the naval officials here to believe that the armor plate has again overtaken the gun in the never-ending struggle for supremacy. This plate is obtained by a novel process carbon being driven directly into the surface of the hot plate by an intensely powerful current of electricity, the result being a face as hard as glass, and of any thickness desired, supported by a tough back which it is claimed can not be cracked. The depth of the hardening is regulated by the length of time the current plays upon the plate. It is claimed that an average plate can be completely treated electrically in five hours. Moreover the plate is claimed to be a third lighter for the same resisting power which means a great saving to contractors.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

An Increase of $4,453,126 as Compared With July 1.

Washington, Aug. 2.—The monthly statement of the national debt shows that at the close of business July 31, 1902, the debt less cash in the treasury amounted to $973,910,367, which is an increase as compared with July 1 of $4,453,126. This increase is accounted for by the reduction in the amount of cash on hand. The debt is recapitulated as follows:

Interest bearing debt, $931,070,340; debt on which interest has ceased since maturity, $1,274,810; debt bearing no interest, $395,537,818. Total, $1,327,884,966. The amount, however, does not include $841,965,089 in certificates and treasury notes outstanding, which are offset by an equal amount of cash on hand held for their redemption. The cash in the treasury is classified as follows:

Gold reserve fund, $150,000,000; trust funds, $841,965,089; general fund, $286,515,509, including $126,152,991 in national bank depositories. Total, $1,278,479,598, against which there are demand liabilities outstanding amounting to $924,504,999, leaving a cash balance on hand of $353,974,599.

Courtesy Rewarded.

Not many months ago $1,000 was willed to a conductor of The Chicago & Alton Railway for being attentive and courteous. A somewhat similar circumstance has reoccurred. Mr. H. J. Titus, a steward on one of the "Alton's" dining-care, recently had for a guest a gentleman to whom he unconsciously gave such polite attention as to attract his patron's notice. Upon arrival of the train in Chicago, this passenger, who was a high official of the Mobile & Ohio Railway, repaired to the general offices of The Chicago & Alton Railway, and being assured of Mr. Titus's ability, promptly appointed the latter Superintendent Commissary of the Mobile & Ohio Railway. Mr. Titus assumes his new duties August 15th, with headquarters in Jackson, Tenn. He will be the youngest railway superintendent of dining-cars in the United States, his age being but twenty-four.

What the Union Pacific is doing in engineering improvements is commended to other companies that operate in parts of the country where no such difficulties are encountered as in the West. Straight roads are economic roads, and they invite traffic. The wild yanks and alarming rolls to which passengers are subject on some of them cause train sickness, which is a form of sea sickness, and headache, and they cause a rapid deterioration of cars and engines. Those railroads make the best for patronage that promise not merely speed, but comfort, and steadiness is the more comfortable, because it indicates security. We have been eager to extend the mileage of this country. Now we might show some expedition in reducing it by following the example of the Union Pacific in straightening needless turns and lowering or raising needless grades.—Brooklyn Eagle.

STONED THE TROOPS.

Three Attacks Made on Them at Shenandoah, Pa.

A Lithunian Is Under Arrest in the Guard House and the Provost Marshal Is on the Trail of Others.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 1.—Twelve hundred state troops are encamped on a hill overlooking Shenandoah. Down in the town where rioters and policemen fought the bloody battle Wednesday night all is quiet and the indications are that so long as the militia remains the peace of the community will not again be broken.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 4.—The entire 8th regiment was called to arms during Saturday night as a result of three attacks made by a band of men in ambush who threw stones at the troops now in camp on the plateau outside of the town. These attacks are becoming so frequent that Brig. Gen. Gobin has decided to adopt stern measures to end them. Sunday night a double guard supplied with ball cartridges surrounds the camp and the sentries have been instructed that if Saturday night's stone throwing is repeated they must shoot to kill and investigate afterwards. One of the attacking party, a Lithunian named William Stoppanitz, is under arrest and is confined in the guard tent, and the provost marshal is on the trail of others. It is not known how many were in the crowd, but the officers of the 8th regiment believe the number to have been more than a dozen.

The first attack, according to Col. Theodore F. Hoffman, was made at 10:45 o'clock Saturday night. Private Payne, of Company I, on sentry duty, saw a party of men on the Mahanoy City road which separates the camp of the 8th regiment from the 12th. He commanded the men to halt and called the corporal of the guard, but before the latter could respond a shower of stones and rocks were thrown at the sentry. One rock struck him on the chest, knocking him down and causing his gun to fall from his hands. He immediately jumped up and fired several shots in the air. As he did so the men ran down the road and were pursued by several strangers. The outpost which had been stationed some distance from the camp, heard the shots and one of the pickets captured Stoppanitz as he came running down the road. The others escaped.

The shooting aroused the whole camp and the 8th regiment was put under arms and Companies B, E and K were immediately out in skirmish lines. They beat the underbrush and laurel, which is five or six feet high all around the camp, but they could find no one. The regiment was then called to quarters and 15 minutes later another shower of stones was thrown at the stable guard, which is located south of the 8th regiment. The guard turned out and three men were seen running along the road in the opposite direction from where the outpost was stationed.

Shortly after 3 o'clock Sunday morning the third attack was made and it was of such a nature that the bugler, under orders from Col. Hoffman, sounded the whole regiment to arms. This time the stable guard was again the object of the mysterious attack. Stones in volleys were thrown at the guard and at the sentries nearby. On account of the laurel, underbrush and the darkness the soldiers could not see the offenders. However, the sentries fired about a dozen shots into the bushes but no one was hit. Some of the bullets went whistling over the tents of the sleeping soldiers of the 12th regiment, across the road.

The noise of the firing and the bugle call to arms stirred up the 12th regiment and the governor's troop of cavalry which is located close to the 8th regiment. Col. Clement, of the 12th regiment, sent out detachments to investigate the trouble, as did also Capt. Ott, in command of the cavalry. The 8th regiment, Col. Hoffman said, was under arms and ready for action in three minutes. Another thorough investigation was made without result and then the command, after standing in formation for 30 minutes, was called to quarters and not again disturbed.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Aug. 2.—Judge Goff returned Friday morning, and in the afternoon in chambers heard the petition for the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus for the striking miners imprisoned by Judge Jackson, of Parkersburg.

Immediately after hearing the petition the judge granted the writ and instructed the marshal to produce the prisoners here next Tuesday at 10 o'clock for hearing. This is considered a great victory for the striking miners.

SEVERE ENGAGEMENT.

The Colombian Revolutionists Defeated at Agua Dulce.

Panama, Colombia, Aug. 2.—The peace commissioners who left here July 29 on the British steamer Cana to visit the revolutionary general, Herrera, near Agua Dulce, have returned to Panama. They informed a press representative that they were unable to fulfill their mission because a very severe engagement between Herrera's forces and the government troops has been in progress since Tuesday, July 29, when the revolutionary forces began to attack Agua Dulce.

At 5 o'clock Thursday morning the best battalions of the revolutionary forces attacked the government entrenchments with fierce courage. The slaughter of the revolutionists is said to have been excessive and barbarous. That same afternoon the white flag was raised in their camp and they asked for an armistice during which they could bury their dead. This was granted. The losses of the rebels up to Wednesday, July 30, were reported at over 200, while the government forces had eight men killed and 11 wounded.

Gen. Moreno, one of the peace commissioners who returned, says the entrenchments at Agua Dulce are masterpieces of military art.

At the expiration of the time of armistice the engagement recommenced with the same fierceness. Nine government battalions which which had not taken part in the fight were still being held in reserve Thursday night.

Gen. Salazar, governor of Panama, has received a letter from the government Gen. Morales Berti saying he is very enthusiastic as to the outcome and that he hopes to win a battle which will decide the fate of the isthmus. Gen. Salazar, in his turn, is doing everything in his power to help Gen. Berti. At 3 o'clock Friday afternoon he dispatched further supplies of provisions and ammunition for Berti's army at Agua Dulce.

ADHESIVE POSTAL STAMPS.

The United States Government May Do Its Own Printing.

Washington, Aug. 2.—The government probably will print its own postage stamps as the result of the bids [illegible] at the post office department [illegible] for supplying the adhesive postage stamps for the United States for the four years beginning October 1 next. It had been stated that the price asked by the bureau of engraving and printing was exorbitant and that the work would have to go to a private concern. The bureau's bid, however, proved the lowest. It is as follows:

Five cents per 1,000 for ordinary postage stamps; 7 cents per 1,000 for postage due stamps; 15 cents per 1,000 for special delivery stamps; $2.82 per 1,000 books containing 12 stamps each; $3.45 per 1,000 books containing 24 stamps each and $4.40 per 1,000 books containing 48 stamps each.

The only other bidder was the American Bank Note and Engraving Co., of New York, which bid is estimated to be about $15,000 higher for the four years than the bureau's bid.

A STRIKE AT IRONTON.

Camden Interstate Railway Co.'s Employes Quit Work.

A Union Motorman Who Refused to Strike Was Hustled From His Car By a Mob and Started For the River.

Ironton, O., Aug. 4.—The strike on the Camden Interstate Railway Co.'s lines was inaugurated Sunday morning and it only took seven hours on the Ironton division to impress upon the company the futility of opposing a union labor organization in a community which has 14 distinct labor organizations.

At an early hour crowds of boys and young men assembled at street intersections along the line and despite the protests of the strikers, hurled epithets and dried fruit and eggs of uncertain age at the motormen and conductors, to the damage of their wearing apparel and that of a few passengers who had no knowledge of the strike. By 11 o'clock the crowds at Elm street bridge and Second and Railroad streets had gained such proportions and were so well supplied with missiles that the non-union crews refused to run their cars through the gauntlet. A haphazard schedule was kept up till noon, when James Sanders, a union motorman, who had backed down at the last minute and refused to go out, was hustled from his car by a mob and started for the river. He begged his captors for mercy, promising not to go to work, and was finally escorted home in a roundabout way to escape the numerous crowds of union sympathizers. The conductor on the same car and one lineman abandoned the car and were taken home in a cab. Other cars were held up by crowds throughout the city, after being pelted with unsavory missiles, and at noon all traffic was abandoned, the non-union men refusing to risk the anger of the crowds which greeted them with jeers and missiles at every corner. Sunday evening not a wheel was turning.

The Ironton strikers had cabs out all day and they secured more passengers than the street cars, women who chose the ancient mode of conveyance in preference to street cars, being cheered by the crowds. The concert at Beechwood park, the railway company's pleasure resort, was abandoned, the Ironton orchestra declining to play after the strike was declared. The sentiment here is almost unanimous for the strikers, and the company will doubtless realize heavy losses on this division, the most remunerative of the entire system. Many business men have declared their intention of cutting out their commercial lighting if the company persists in its refusal to recognize the union and prolongs a contest which will be disastrous to business interests. Thus far, the crowds of union sympathizers have had full sway without molestation from the authorities, not a policeman showing up at any of the points of disturbance. The local militia left for camp at Newark Monday morning and the preservation of order will devolve upon the officials in case of more serious outbreaks almost certain to occur if the cars are operated. Set Vinson, of Huntington, W. Va., general attorney of the Camden company, arrived here late Sunday afternoon. He held an informal conference with the strike leaders in the lobby of the New Ironton hotel. He said the company was always willing to recognize the union. He was assured by the strikers that if he would put the statement in writing the strike would end in 24 hours. He gave no positive assurances, but said the company was ready to do the right thing by the men.

Huntington, W. Va., Aug. 4.—There was general disorder Sunday throughout Huntington, Central City and other towns through which the lines of the Camden Interstate railway runs, the result of the general strike order of motormen and conductors which was to have taken effect Sunday. But few of the motormen and conductors in West Virginia and Kentucky obeyed the order, but every man quit work in Ohio towns through which the line runs. The lines here were blockaded with friends of union labor and the city authorities seemed powerless, or rather made no effort to preserve order. The sheriff refused to act and the company officials have appealed to Gov. White for protection. Motormen, conductors and passengers have been dragged from cars and disorder seems on the increase. Cars are running with non-union labor.

Windows Broken by Thunder.

Venice, Aug. 4.—A great window in the basilica of the Dominican church, St. John and St. Paul, fell in Sunday, as the result of having been shaken by a clap of thunder.

The church itself, which ranks next in importance to St. Marks, has been declared by experts to be in danger of collapse. It contains fine monuments of the most famous doges, who lie buried there.

Four Persons Killed in a Collision.

New York, August 4.—Given E. Brocar, a landsman of the United States cruiser Montgomery lying at the Brooklyn navy yard, committed suicide by taking poison on board the vessel Sunday. It is thought his recent failure to pass an examination for naval yeoman caused him to become despondent and kill himself. Brocar was in his nineteenth year and had only recently been recruited into the service. He belonged to a well known family of Louisville, Ky., and at the request of the family the body will be sent there Monday.

Brocar was transferred from the receiving ship Columbia at about the time he received the news that he had proved entirely eligible for the promotion sought with th single exception of defective eyesight.

A UNIQUE LOCOMOTIVE.

It Is Designed For the Use of Officials In Making Inspection Trips.

Baltimore, Aug. 4.—A unique engine has just been completed by the Baltimore & Ohio railroad at its Mount Clair shops, this city. It is designed for the use of officials in making inspection trips. Though called an inspection engine, it really answers the purpose of a whole train.

The engine has a small passenger coach constructed on top of the boiler back of the smokestack. The boiler is heavily covered with asbestos and the floor of the car with brussels carpet. The seats in the coach are arranged in amphitheater style, so as to give every one in the car a full view of the track and surrounding country. Passengers enter the car by winding stairs on either side of the front pilot. The engine may be readily run in either direction.

The correspondent says there is a likelihood of this plan maturing.

INTERESTING STATE NEWS.

KENTUCKY STATE GUARD.

The Encampment at Mammoth Cave Is An Ideal One.

Mammoth Cave, Ky., Aug. 2.—The site of the Kentucky state guard encampment is an ideal one—in fact, no better situation could have been chosen from the Cumberlands to the "Pennyrile." The Barboursville and Whitesburg companies arrived Friday afternoon. Ten thousand people watched them as they marched from the station to the camp. The Whitesburg company attracted greater attention than any other, from the fact that this company was organized under Capt. John A. Webb, a fearless young man of Letcher county, to suppress the kuklux lawlessness at Boone's Fork, in Letcher county, during the spring of 1901. This company is made up almost wholly of mountain teachers, and, although they have had little target practice, they are expert marksmen. The present encampment bids fair to be the best in the history of the state guard service.

Camp Lawton, Mammoth Cave, Ky., Aug. 4.—The third day at the camp of the Kentucky state militia was one of the most enjoyable so far spent here. The Catlettsburg brass band was out early—at the first call, 5 a. m.—and, with the exception of a few intervals, serenaded the camp all day. It was the last to "pitch tents" when the tattoo was sounded at 10:30.

The Whitesburg company, under command of Capt. John A. Webb, after marching two hours over the drill grounds, returned to the tents to prepare for a long route visit through the cave, which began at 9 o'clock sharp. They were accompanied by the Tyrone company. Miles Gibson, the youngest private in the Whitesburg company, and the most noted angler in Eastern Kentucky, took his fishing rod and tackle into the cave, determined to have the pleasure of bringing some of the wonderful eyeless fish back to his home in the mountains. The boys returned at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

Ferguson, the noted starter. It contains 250 acres and the consideration is $36,500. At the same time the firm comes into possession of 14 brood mares and the noted stallions St. George and Prince Royal at prices not made public. Baker & Gentry will transfer their stock to Kingston and continue to use it as a thoroughbred stud. The farm is situated two miles from Lexington.

HE BORROWED A KNIFE.

When He Slashed at His Throat the Owner Took It Back.

Bowling Green, Ky., Aug. 1.—Spencer Edwards, of this city, walked up to W. H. McIntyre on the street in front of the court house Thursday and asked for the loan of his knife. McIntyre handed it to him, whereupon Edwards opened it and made a slash at his own throat. McIntyre caught his arm and prevented him from doing more injury to himself than a slight abrasion of the skin. Edwards had been separated from his wife and had been drinking for some time, which is thought to have caused the attempt at self-destruction.

STEAMER'S NARROW ESCAPE.

The City of Wheeling Collided With City of Cincinnati at North Bend.

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 2.—The steamer City of Wheeling had a narrow escape from serious disaster in the Ohio river off North Bend, Ind., while bound from Cincinnati to Madison, Ind., with a cabin full of passengers. Part of her freight was washed overboard and her passengers were thrown into a panic for a few moments as the result of a peculiar collision with the steamer City of Cincinnati, en route from Cincinnati to Louisville.

The Wheeling, which is a small boat, was following directly in the wake of the City of Cincinnati and when a shallow place in the river opposite North Bend was reached the latter boat suddenly slowed down and the Wheeling continuing at full speed became locked with her. A moment later the pilot of the City of Cincinnati called for a full head of steam and the larger craft shot forward rapidly, causing tremendous swells which rolled over the head of the smaller boat, deluging the main deck with water and washing over a quantity of freight. The water poured into the hatches of the City of Wheeling and her bow plunged down as if she was about to sink head foremost. As the boat rocked up and down the passengers became panic-stricken, but were soon quieted, for the Wheeling steadied herself in a few moments and was successfully landed at North Bend. Most of the freight which was washed overboard was recovered.

AERIAL PHENOMENON.

A Meteor Passes Over Kentucky—Causes Much Exciting Comment.

Newport, Ky., Aug. 4.—A strange aerial phenomenon was witnessed by hundreds of persons in Newport at 10:30 o'clock Sunday night. Whether the strange visitor was a meteor or an aerolite can only be conjectured, as none who saw it were able to make the distinction. The path traversed was shown by a large, broad trail of sparks, resembling a skyrocket in its course, from northeast to southwest. It was first seen by the residents of Bonnie Leslie, East Newport, and passengers returning on the street cars from Ft. Thomas. Three young men standing at Fourth and Monmouth streets were startled by the bright stream of light produced, and could distinctly hear the hissing sound made by the heavenly visitor. They state that it looked like a huge ball of fire describing an arc about 300 feet above the housetops, which formed a letter C and when near the Licking river appeared to them to change into a letter S. The peculiar object was seen by scores of people as it passed over the courthouse, at Fourth and York streets.

Colored People Desert a Town.

Petersburg, Ky., Aug. 1.—Consternation prevails among the Negro population here. Arthur Watson, the lion of colored society, received a whitecap notice to get out of town by 12 o'clock Wednesday night or suffer the consequences, for being intimate with a white woman. Fearing a mob would wreak vengeance, the entire colored population crossed over to Lawrenceburg and Aurora at 12 o'clock Wednesday night. Fifty inhabitants of Buckstown have fled.

Caught in a Thresher.

Covington, Ky., Aug. 2.—John Stagman, aged 22, a farmer, who lives on the Ripple Creek pike, Campbell county, Ky., was probably fatally injured Friday near Dodds' Hill on the Alexandria pike. His face, hands, arms and legs were badly burned, and it is thought that his spine is also affected.

BOONE CO., RECORDER
Wednesday, - - August 6, 1902
W. L. RIDDELL, - - Publisher.

For State Senator.

The RECORDER is authorized to announce J. W. CAMMACK, of Owenton, as a candidate for State Senator in the 23rd Senatorial District, composed of the counties of Boone, Owen and Gallatin, subject to the action of the Democratic purty.

For Circuit Clerk.

We are authorized to announce S. E. TERRILL, of Idlewild, as a candidate for Circuit Court Clerk, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

For Jailer.

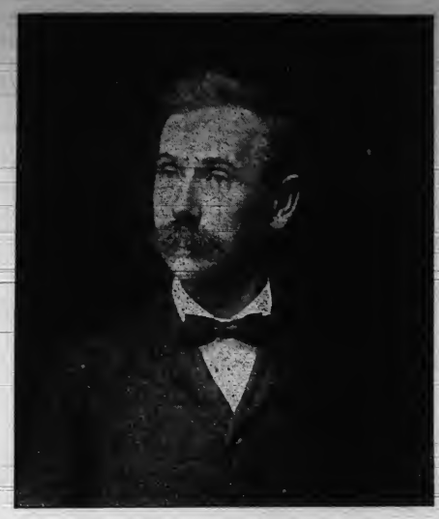
The RECORDER is authorized to announce SAMUEL ADAMS as a candidate for Jailer of Boone county, subject to the action of the Democratic party.—Primary electiyn, Aug. 23d, 1902.

The Indiana farmer who has not been swindled out of several thousand dollars on fake foot races in the last few months is not considered a dead game sport in the Hoosier State.

Two Covington attorneys engaged in a set-to in the new city building, one day last week. It was the initial fistic performance in the new structure and caused considerable talk in town.

The harmony meetings the Democrats have been holding do not seem to have been productive of any harmony to date. So long as there is more than one kind of Democrats, there will be very little party harmony.

While Congressman Boreing is a candidate for the Republican Congressional nomination in the eleventh district, his opponent, D. G. Colson, is endeavoring to show that he is also a candidate for another place supposed to be not so desirable. It appears that Boreing is up against a pretty tough proposition.



Hold on, reader! Since the above was put in type Congressman Boreing has wiped the earth up with Colson and Parker, at a primary election held Monday.

The Owen county Democrats have nominated J. W. Cammack for State Senator in this district. As it is Owen's time to furnish the candidate, Boone and Gallatin will most heartily concur in the action she has taken. The nominee is a young lawyer of distinction, and Owen claims he will represent the district with great ability. His nomintion is equivalent to an election.

The right of the state executive committee to call a primary for the nomination of state officers is denied by some politicians, while others deride the idea that it has no right, and say that there is no doubt of the committee's anthority in the premises. If it has the power it should certainly exercise it. The convention has gone into such bad repute that something is necessary to assure the voter that his will shall be heeded. A primary election will do it.

WHAT is regarded by ordnance experts of the army and navy as the most important advance in modern war devices since the perfection of the Krupp face-hardening process for armor, has been achieved by the Ordnance Department of the army under the direction of its Chief, Brigadier-General William Crozier. It is a new time fuse for armor-piercing shells. The importance of this time fuse lies in the fact that it does not detonate the shell until the penetrative ability of the projectile has been exhausted.

A gentleman in a nearby town took his little boy to church with him last Sunday for the first time. Instructing the lad about his behavior, he wound up by telling the boy to keep an eye on him and do just as he did. When the contribution box was passed papa dropped in a coin. Tommy saw his father's hand go into the box, and remembering the advice, put his hand in also. When the box passed by the lad whispered out loud enough to be heard all around: "Say, papa, I got a quarter; how much did you get?"

Miss Nannie Bristow's talk on the temperance question, yesterday, has been highly complimented.

Orlando Snyder, a veteran teacher, was an onlooker, yesterday. For the present he has given up instructing the young idea how to shoot.

The principal event at the Institute yesterday was the presentation of a handsome goldheaded cane to D. C. Peck by his pupils of many years ago in this county. The presentation speech was made by Attorney S. W. Tolin. The afiair was a surprise to Mr. Peck, who accepted the gift in a brief and feeling speech.

who established an enviable reputation as a teacher in the Schools of Boone County, and now principal of a Covington High School.

There was quite a good attendance at the handkerchief bazaar, Monday night, and the ladies of the Presbyterian church realized quite a neat little sum by the sale of handkerchiefs. The sewing circle, tableaux and singing were enjoyed very much by the audience, especially the singing of Mr. Pericles Grubbs, and it charmed the audience, which manifested its appreciation by repeated encores.

This is the dryest section of the county. The corn needs a good rain, although the light shower of yesterday will be very beneficial.

GRANT COUNTY.

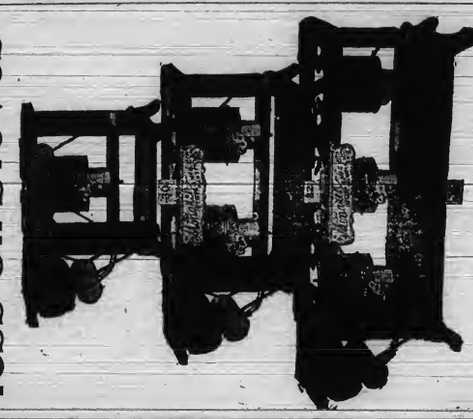
[Williamstown Courier.]

The meadows of Grant county were never better than they have been this year.

Wheat threshing in Grant county is in full blast and will be ended this week. The crop has been fair in quanity but poor in quality. Oats are turning out remarkably well.

The farmers are complaining quite a good deal of the ravages of the chinch bug and many say that if it does not rain immediately great damage will be done both to the corn and the tobacco crops.

Hon. D. C. Points and Willard Gibson of Stewartsville were in Frankfort on last Friday to see Gov. Beckham in regard to the pardoning of the brother of Mr. Gibson who some forty years ago committed a homicide in this county. The case has been entirely forgotten by our people and the witnesses if any, are dead and scattered to many distant points. The killing was supposed to have been done in self defense.



The reunion of the Fourth Kentucky (Confederates,) will be held at Campbellsburg on August 22 and 23. It was originally called to meet at Drennon Springs but the order was rescinded and the above place and dates were decided upon.

During a recent electrical storm lightning gave Geo. Roseberry, colored, of Bellevue neighborhood a terrific freight. It struck a tree some distance from the house. The tree and the house were connected by a wire clothes-line, along which the current traveled to the house, which it entered, going through a china closet, reducing the china set to dust. It then threw Roseberry out of his bed and cut numerous other capers very much to the alarm of the Roeberry household, but seriously injuring none. Geo. thought the day of "kingdom come" was at hand.

County Surveyor Vest vouches for the truthfulness of the following, which goes to prove that there are some pretty smart snakes: Several nights since he was at James H. Watson's, his brother-in-law, in the vicinity of Walton. Some time after dark a terrible racket was heard in the coop in which was a chicken hen with a brood of young turkeys, and Messrs. Vest and Watson went to ascertain the cause of confusion in the coop, when they discovered a very large black snake had lassoed the old hen around the neck with about six inches of its tail, and was holding her at bay while it was proceeding to swallow the little turkeys, one of which it had partially swallowed. The snake was killed, and the hen more dead than alive was released from her perilous position and finally came around all right. The snake evidently was smart enough to know how to protect itself from the attacks of the hen.

Last Thursday night, while it was thundering and lightning, Mrs. W. J. Rice had an experience that she and the family will long remember. She was closing a window blind, when it hung and she gave it a strong pull, at which time she discovered that the obstruction was a snake, when she screamed and jumped back, letting the wire screen sash in the window drop, which, in its descent caught the reptile, and held it till Mr. Rice and Mr. M. T. Garnett came upon the scene, where they found a black snake about five feet long threshing the air in every direction in its frantic endeavor to release itself from the firm fastening of the screen sash, which had caught it about six inches from the end of the tail. His snakeship was soon dispatched, but it was some time before Mrs. Rice recovered entirely from her scare. It is supposed that the snake had crawled up on the blind while it was open, and when Mrs. Rice gave it a sudden pull it threw the reptile partially into the room.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

IN WATERMELON TIME.

I will not voice no objection to the apple or the peach,
I rather like a berry, either black or straw or blue,
There's a quality or flavor I am partial to in each;
I can eat a plum or cherry with no small enjoyment, too;
In its season I can tackle a nice orange or a fig;
There are times when pears or nectarines go promptly to the spot,
But there's no fruit of them all that suits yours truly like a big
And juicy watermelon when the weather's blazing hot.

I love it, cool and dewy, in its pretty, green-ish rind,
When, fagged and warm and parched with dust an inch thick in my throa
I see its rosy pulp—that is, I see it in my mind—
Its generous proportions, and upon the same I gloat,
But when that vision's realized I ask for nothing more;
I'm perfectly and blissfully contented with my lot.
I think there never could be greater happiness in store
Than a juicy watermelon when the weather's blazing hot.

I don't require a silver fork; a plate I'll do without;
A little shade, a butcher knife—these simple things I pray.
I do no fancy carving, but with reverence devout
I slice it down the middle in the good, old-fashioned way.
I take a semi-circle and my face therein encloses,
I shut my eyes in ecstacy. Maybe you think I'm not
In earnest when I tell you that the finest fruit that grows
Is a juicy watermelon when the weather's blazing hot.

Billy's Sacrifice

By JOHN H. RAFTERY.

His name was William Lowther Hereford, but the Gales always called him Billy except Mr. Gale, the head of the family, who didn't like the young fellow. Mr. Gale's dislike for Billy may have been prejudice or it may have been foresight, but it began while his son Bruce was at college and was founded upon and strengthened by Bruce's stories of his friend's lawlessness. Bruce called it "spirits," but his father, who suspected that his boy's extravagance was due to bad company made a shrewd guess that Billy was at the bottom of all the devilment which kept Bruce in debt to tradesmen and in disfavor with his professors.

But Bruce was loyal to his friend, brought him home for the vacation at the end of their junior year and—made him acquainted with Marjory, his only sister, an impulsive, beautiful, athletic and self-willed girl of 20. The Gales expected to find Billy a restless, laughing, harum-scarum "boy" of 24, and, as Mr. Gale expressed it, nobody expected much of him," but they were surprised, to say the least, at his appearance. Of good height, paler than the athlete Bruce, with very black, wavy hair, calm, wistful, gray eyes, a mouth like a woman's, gentle-mannered, low-voiced, sure of himself, but modest, cheerful, without levity, handsome when he smiled, but seldom laughing; in a word, quite a contradiction to their anticipations of a young man famous among his friends as the most reckless, insubordinate, fun-loving roysterer that ever tantalized a worthy dominie or upset the decorum of a morning chapel.

"I like him," said Mrs. Gale.

"On his good behavior for a purpose," growled Papa Gale, who evidently didn't like him.

"He seems quite civilized," said Miss Marjory, rather spiritedly, but as nobody gain said her opinion, she left the room and joined Bruce and Billy in the tennis court.

His visit lasted but a fortnight then, but when he said good-by and drove away in the pony cart with Marjory, "who was going to town anyway," everybody, including Mr. Gale, felt a trifle lonesome.

"He's poor, isn't he?" the rich man asked his son.

"Yes, but he doesn't know it and wouldn't care if he did," replied the son.

"How does he manage to 'hold up his end,' as you call it, at college?" Mr. Gale looked very foxy now.

"Oh, he doesn't spend money," smirked Bruce, "he doesn't have to—"

"Not while there are spendthrifts like you to spend it for him, I suppose!" grunted the 'old man,' whose ideas of economy were forever getting him into ill humor. He marched off with a warning about the necessity for economy during the coming year, but Bruce lighted a cigarette and went whistling to the stables. Marjory came back in an hour looking quite forlorn.

"You like him, don't you, Marjy?" her brother said, tossing a crab apple at a peacock.

"Indeed I do," she answered frankly. "He isn't a bit like you—like what I expected. If I were you, though, I'd quit telling papa about those pranks at college. He's so prejudiced already that he just can't see any good in Bill—in Mr. Hereford. As for me, I don't mind telling you, I don't believe he could do a mean thing if he tried."

And Bruce was grateful to his sister for these praises of Billy, for, selfish as he was and necessary as Hereford's superior talents were to his success at college, he came nearer to loving Marjory than anyone except, perhaps, himself.

The winter after Bruce graduated, after many objections from the pleasure loving youth, he "went into business" with his father on condition that Billy Hereford also be given a place in the office. Mr. Gale didn't like the idea, but as he happened to need a cashier, and as Bruce's heart seemed set on having his friend with him, and as he couldn't think of any serious "count" against Billy, the thing was settled, and the two friends entered simultaneously as cashier and credit man of the Gale factory. Then it was Mr. Gale's turn to be astonished, not at Bruce's quick progress—that was to be expected of the son of so famous a business man—but at almost supernatural aptness for all manner of commercial achievements which Billy at once displayed. In six months he was easily the best informed man about the place. He coached Bruce now as he had coached him at college, taught him the mysteries of "double entry" and the science of journalizing, "worked" him on the books after office hours and divided the work with such effect that the two young men between them were soon equal to and familiar with every department of the business.

Meanwhile Billy was a frequent visitor at the Gale home. Mr. Gale continued to dislike his cashier, but he could find no fault with him. Mrs. Gale was beginning to "need" him. Marjory—but that was her secret.

It was November that Billy's visits to the Gale house suddenly ceased.

"How is Mr. Hereford?" asked Marjory's mother, noticing the silent, sullen faces of her husband and Bruce.

"He's gone, absconded, rubbed us!" roared Mr. Gale, with an oath. "Got away with $5,000 before—"

"How dare you!" said Marjory, turning very pale, but her father paid no attention. Billy, he said, had made away with the money; an overdraft at the bank had betrayed the theft. There was no doubt about it, Hereford either could not or would not explain. That was enough for them to know. Mr. Gale would let him go his ways, not because he had any doubts of his guilt, but, well, because he was Bruce's friend, or had been.

It was early in June the following year that the Gales went east for Marjory's sake. She had been ailing for quite awhile, and the doctor urged a change of scene, sea air and what not. When they were installed in their cottage at Chelsea, Mrs. Gale telephoned for a phaeton with a driver to take Marjory along the shore drive. Her mother cautioned the man, who was bearded and bronzed, to be very cautious. He seemed very nervous, almost ill, and his hand shook, but the girl climbed in and the phaeton started. When it was in the thicket at the foot of Rogers' Hill, Marjory, tears in her eyes, and her lips quivering, put her wasted hand on his arm, on "the driver's" arm, and said:

"I know you, Billy."

"I wish you did, Miss Gale," he answered very quietly, looking out across the sea.

"I know you didn't do it, Billy," she whispered, "you needn't prove it, I'm quite satisfied—"

He looked round quickly, his fine eyes dilating, his brunet face flushing beneath the tan.

"What—who—did Bruce tell you? He should not have done it. He promised me he would keep silent—But you won't hold it against him, will you, Miss Marjory. It was gambling, nothing else. Bruce is all right, Miss Gale, 'just can't overlook a bet,' as he used to say. He promised me he'd quit it."

"But—so Bruce is 'all right,' but mean enough to let you suffer for him? He—"

"No, no, he wanted to explain, to confess, indeed he did," interrupted Billy, "didn't he tell you? I wouldn't let him. He had everything to lose and nothing to gain by disgracing himself, and all of you. While I? What did it, what did it matter? I have nobody, no friends except Bruce—and—"

"You have me, Billy." There was a long pause before he said: "God bless you, Marjory. I hoped so, and —and, I intended to find out for sure, but Bruce got away from me too soon, and then it was too late."

And, though Marjory went driving every day till September, it took all her ingenuity and all her eloquence to persuade her driver that the best thing to be done for Bruce, for herself, for Billy, for all of them, was to put up her brother on his honor to "square" Hereford with Mr. Gale at any cost. And he did it.—Chicago Record-Herald.

TRIUMPH OF WOMEN.

A Number Who Have Distinguished Themselves by Deeds of Daring.

In Brooklyn the other day Mrs. Lennie Kelley saved the life of her aged father by climbing over the dashboard of the buggy in which they were driving on the Coney Island boulevard and seizing the reins that had dropped from his hand and were dangling at the heels of their runaway horse. Would Pamelia or Clerissa or even Mme. de Stnel's extraordinary heroine, Delphine, have done that? asks the Philadelphia Times. In Pittsburg Mrs Sarah E. McCloy, in a law court, has just excelled in the intellectual feat of Portia, and has surpassed many shining masculine lights of the bar, for she managed her own case in a breach of promise suit, and proved, too, contrary to the old adage, that she did not have a fool for a client. There were some novelties in her methods of examining witnesses, as, for instance her telling one of them point blank that he was a liar. In the first case there was a triumph of nerve and muscle, and in the second of nerve and intellect. The obvious conclusion is that the era in which woman was a "downtrodden creature" is fully past, for, with qualifying experience of the world, she is now quite capable of defending her own and of holding it.

PLATT'S AMENDMENT.

More to Blame Than Anything Else for the Injustice That Has Been Done Cuba.

President Roosevelt has claimed great credit for his party on account of what has been done by the United States in Cuba, but he admits that there has been something wrong even in that great example. On the 4th of July, he said:

"I regret that a measure of reciprocity with Cuba is not already embodied in statute or in treaty." He believes that the United States has assumed obligations in consideration of the acceptance by Cuba of the principle of the Platt amendment, and that in refusing to pass the Cuban reciprocity bill, his partisans in congress have acted in bad faith.

"Cuba," he says, "must occupy a peculiar relation to us in the field of international politics. She must in the larger sense be a part of the general political system in international affairs, of which this republic stands at the head." The reason assigned by him for this position is that Cuba "has assented to that view," and that as a consequence of this compact—this covenant involved in the adoption of the Platt amendment by congress and its acceptance by Cuba—"this nation is bound to give her special economic privileges not given to other nations." But it follows that this nation would not have been so bound but for the virtual enforcement of the terms of the Platt amendment upon Cuba by a republican congress and president.

Hence it is clear that the Platt amendment, and not the denial of reciprocity, was the beginning and cause of the injustice, since without it there would have been no injustice in such a denial. And the republican party stands charged with full knowledge, at the commencement of the present Cuba-American relationship, that it could not as it has not performed its obligations to Cuba without the aid of democrats. Therefore, he and his partisans are justly responsible for placing Cuba in the situation where reciprocity or ruin is inevitable, and then denying to her the one indispensable measure of relief. The president's position is a condemnation of the whole Cuban policy, because it is a condemnation of the essential and characteristic feature of it, which is neither less nor more than perfidy for plunder's sake—a policy morally on a par with the Philippine policy of the same party.

This policy is all of a piece with using the funds from the Cuban treasury to purchase homes to the support of Palma and the administration policy. Also the payment from the same fund of $12,000 to Thurber to help carry out the plans of the sugar trust.

Indeed, the republican statesmen themselves are not all agreed that our army and officials in Cuba deserve the praise bestowed upon them by the president in his speech of July 4. Nothing shows this better than a passage at arms in the senate between Mr. Spooner and Mr. Hale, which occurred some time ago, and from which we quote the following:

"Mr. Hale—I do not sympathize with him in the belief that this people has gained anything thus far in what it has taught the Cubans. I think we would have been better off if we had not taught the Cubans the lesson that has been taught in the last few months.

"Mr. Spooner—What lesson?

"Mr. Hale—The lesson of fraud, peculation, appropriation of revenues, cheating, stealing—a carnival in every direction of corruption and fraud. I think it would have been very much better if we had not taught those people or tried to teach those people this. I do not recognize any line of fealty to party obligations that compels me to consent to the proposition that everything has gone right in Cuba.

"Mr. Spooner—Nobody pretends it."

——There is no doubt about the policy and the principles of the democrats. The democratic policy is against the trusts and for tariff reform and for Philippine freedom. If the people really want these reforms they will vote the democratic ticket. All political indications point to democratic victory in the fall elections and in 1904. "You cannot fool all of the people all of the time." The republicans have reached the limit.—Houston (Tex.) Post.

AN ISSUE THAT STICKS.

Republicans Find the Trust Question Something That Is Hard to Handle.

When Chairman Griggs, of the democratic congressional committee, satirized the republican party and President Roosevelt for having just discovered that there is need of effective legislation against trusts, only the hide-bound organs of his party gave undivided approval. They agreed with the chairman that to run a republican campaign upon the claim that the party had recently learned the inadequacy of the Sherman act would make the contest a huge comedy. Where Representative Griggs invited opposition was in bringing a joint indictment against congress and the president, says the Detroit Free Press.

In his zeal to make a sweeping accusation the chairman failed to admit that the president met with poor success in his efforts to influence the policy of the last congress. It openly opposed him in the matter of Cuban reciprocity and calmly ignored him as to many of the recommendations made in the first message issued to that body by him. So far as the trust question is concerned congress had its instructions as to dealing with it from the republican national convention which called for their proper regulation in no uncertain terms, yet the majority in absolute control did nothing.

To say that it did nothing is too mild. They voted down every proposition from the democrats for the restraint and punishment of monopolies. Now the party managers insist in stentorian tones that just as soon as congress assembles in December steps will be taken to deal with the trusts as they deserve. This important issue is referred by the dominant party to the short term, when the amount of unfinished business will consume the brief time available. The best that can reasonably be expected is that an antitrust measure may be framed and referred to the proper committee. But that might have been done at the session just closed, and there is no good reason why it might not have been reported and promptly acted upon had the party so willed.

The only convincing explanation is that the republicans in congress did not wish to antagonize the trusts, for they are great campaign contributors when they see a good investment in the contributions, and there is to be an election of congressmen in the fall.

ROOSEVELT'S CIVIL SERVICE GUILLOTINE.

PRESS COMMENTS.

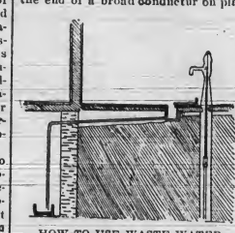
——The present tariff was avowedly framed to give "higher wages to American labor." It now operates to give lower prices to foreign consumers and higher profits to American trusts.—N. Y. World.

——On its record of unfailing service to the trusts at the expense of the people the republican party goes before the voters of this country in the congressional campaigns. No vague promises of anti-trust legislation "next time" will suffice to overcome this record.—St. Louis Republic.

——The shrewdest republican politicians recognize the possibilities of democratic reunion and of democratic victory and that fact of itself should increase the determination of democrats to get together in a manner imitating the wisdom of the past and pointing to a renewal of past victories.—Brooklyn Eagle.

——Suits against trusts to compel them to be trusts according to law are all very well in their way. But such suits, as a means of giving permanent relief to the people from trust robbery, are about as efficacious as poultices for appendicitis. What is wanted is the destroying surgery of legislation, and nobody can expect that from a republican congress.—San Francisco Examiner.

——The democratic party does not agree with Senator Vest that it would be a good thing for it to be beaten by the republicans this year. The party is in a fighting mood and far better fighting condition now than it has known since 1892. It intends to attack the republicans all along the line and to give them a walloping such as they have seldom known.—Atlanta Journal.



AGRICULTURAL HINTS.

WASTE WATER UTILIZED.

A System of Pump Drainage That Will Prove Quite Satisfactory in Most Localities.

A method of conducting the waste water from a pump to a trough in the cellar under kitchen of a farmhouse is shown by the sectional sketch. The trough is used for holding crocks of milk, butter, or in fact any like articles it is desired to keep cool and fresh by means of the cold water that runs to trough after pumping.

In the case illustrated, the well is about 11 feet from the house, and an open porch nine feet wide extends from house to pump platform. Under the end of a broad conductor on platform, which catches the drip from spout of pump, a small trough is located. This trough is made from a piece of squared timber chiseled out hollow and is about 22x8½ inches outside and 18x5½x5½ inches inside measurement. An iron pipe, one inch in diameter, runs from the small trough to the large one in cellar, being placed under porch and extended through the wall, as is shown in cut.

HOW TO USE WASTE WATER.

The large trough is made from a log, squared and hollowed out similarly as is the small one. It is ten feet long and 15x8½ inches at the ends outside; inside is 9 feet long, 12 inches wide and 6 inches deep. This space is sufficient to hold about ten crocks of four gallons size; other sizes in proportion. At one end near bottom is a one-inch hole stopped with wooden plug to empty the trough when occasion demnuds. At a point about one and one-half inches from top edge of trough, another hole kept open serves to carry off the overflow water. These holes empty into a stone ditch or drain that runs from cellar and carries away the water.

The plan as followed in this case may be changed to suit the location of well, etc., or to suit the wishes of the farmer. It may be adopted at least in part by many who have a well in proximity to the cellar. The large and small troughs may be made of plank and overflow water from the large one may be conducted away with a pipe. It will no doubt be best to use a two-inch pipe between pump and cellar, since the water will run away from the small trough quicker when filling the cellar trough by pumping in a new supply of water. However, the drainage from pump where water is frequently pumped for household use, will keep the trough supplied with cool water since what remains in the iron pump stock is generally pumped out before catching any of the water. The plan as it is illustrated and described has been in use for some time and is quite satisfactory.—J. G. Allahouse, in Farm and Home.

GIRLS ON THE FARM.

By Exercising a Little Enterprise, They Can Easily Make Quite a Bit of Pin Money.

Farmers' daughters who leave comfortable homes to seek uncertain employment in town often make a mistake. There are few cases where the same amount of energy and industry expended at home would not bring equal returns, besides the comforts and safeguards that are retained.

Most girls could obtain the use of an acre or two of land, and on this they might produce something profitable. Eggs guaranteed strictly fresh, pure honey, fat squabs, plump and tender chickens—all these good things are desired by city people, and many of them are willing to pay good prices for articles that are always kept up to the mark in quality. The raising of these may mean some hard work, but not so hard or confining as standing all day behind a counter or sitting at a sewing-machine or typewriter.

A New Jersey woman some years ago planted one-fourth of an acre of Tom Thumb cucumbers, tended them with care, and pickled them according to an old family recipe. She sold them first by a retail grocer, but when they became known she was able to sell them to the best wholesale trade, and makes a tidy sum.—Farm Journal.

Fighting the Woolly Aphis.

Apple trees are sometimes badly infested with woolly aphis, which attacks the roots as well as the branches, causing knots and swellings to appear. If they are very numerous the fruit, when produced at all, will be small and imperfect, and the trees will make but little growth. The root form can be treated with wood ashes or tobacco dust, and those on the branches can be destroyed with kerosene sprays or strong tobacco water.

In Mexico there is a strong prejudice against the employment of women and girls in industrial enterprises.

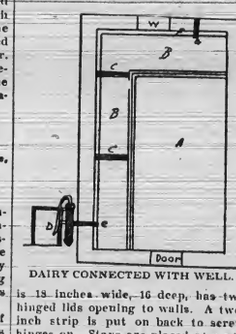
SWEDISH MILK POWDER.

A Dairy Invention Which Is Attracting Considerable Attention in This Country.

Mention has been made within the last few months of a process of drying skimmed milk, invented by Dr. M. Ekenburg, in Sweden. The same United States consul who sent to this country the earlier reports—Robert S. S. Bergh, at Gothenburg—now adds further details. He says that the matter has attracted so much attention in America that he has received many letters of inquiry. Dr. Ekenburg hopes to be able to show a model of his system in operation in a Swedish creamery in the near future, and could be persuaded to make a similar exhibition in the United States. Two patents have been taken out, one for the process and one for the apparatus used.

Powder made from skimmed milk keeps better than that in which the cream remains. It has been estimated that if the skimmed milk of the Swedish creameries alone were converted into powder it would produce 132,276,000 pounds a year, to which Dr. Ekenburg imputes a value of $10,720,000, or a trifle more than Sweden gets for all her butter. Recent improvements in separators take more fat out of fresh milk than formerly, and leave the skimmed milk less useful.

A Gothenburg paper thinks that the milk powder could be extensively used in making puddings and sauces, for mixing into chocolate, preserves, cake, biscuit and confectionery, and that it might be employed in the army and navy and in prisons, hospitals and poorhouses for provision. That publication adds:



"The composition of the milk powder is, according to a statement which Commercial Chemist Landin made in a lecture before the Swedish Technological club, on the average, as follows: Albuminous matter, 36 per cent.; sugar of milk, 49 per cent.; fat, 1 per cent.; milk salts, 7.5 per cent., and moisture, 6.5 per cent.

"If we, from a nutritive point of view, pay attention only to the albuminous matter, we find that one kilogram (2.2046 pounds) of milk powder equals 1.8 kilograms (2.48 pounds) of boneless meat from neat cattle, which usually contains, on the average, 20 per cent. of albuminous matter and from 70 to 75 per cent. of water. The white of an egg contains about 12.6 per cent. of albumen and 85.7 per cent. of water; therefore, the nutrimental value of the milk powder is nearly three times as great as the white of an egg. Owing to the large quantity of sugar in the milk powder, and the milk salts, which are physiologically important in the formation of the blood, the real value is comparatively still higher."

MAKES DAIRYING EASY.

By Connecting the Dairy Room with a Well Much Trying Work Can Be Saved.

A dairy room connected with a well would save much work on many a farm. This plan may be of value to some. The room is 12 by 10 feet with walls 18 inches thick filled with sawdust. It also has 15 inches of sawdust under the floor and tank. The floor space between tank and wall, at a, is 7 by 9 feet. In the top and center is a ventilator 6 inches thick. Tank is 18 inches wide, 16 deep, has two hinged lids opening to walls. A two-inch strip is put on back to screw hinges on. Stays are placed at c c to hold the tank together at top. The bottom of tank is 10 inches higher than the floor, saving stooping to lift out the milk. The room should be 8 feet high in the clear. Shelves may be placed over tank for canned fruit. The well box, d, 18 by 24 by 8 inches is connected to tank by a 1-inch pipe, e, which has an elbow extending down two inches under water to exclude air. The overflow pipe, f, is five inches from bottom of tank. A drain pipe is at g for emptying tank when necessary. For the milk from a few cows this plan is excellent. If water is not cool enough, a lump of ice may be placed in the tank.—W. A. Sharp, in Farm and Home.

How Long to Keep a Cow.

The answer is short to the question: "How long should a dairy cow be kept?" Keep the cow only so long as she pays a gratifying profit. If no record is kept of profit and loss on the farm neither man nor beast will get credit for services rendered. Every animal should have a ledger standing account. Even justice to man and beast alike is honorable. The farmer's methods in bookkeeping are not always commended by expert accountants. Business demands system, and that system must be correct. When the leaf is turned over in correct bookkeeping, the profitless live stock will be got rid of at the earliest possible moment. Profitless stock is the heaviest tax the farmer, dairyman and breeder is imperiously called upon to pay.

SECRET OF SUCCESS.

It Was Brought from Heaven and Given to Men by Christ Himself.

Sermon by the "Highway and Byway" Preacher on a Theme Which Occupies the Attention of the World in Every Age.

Chicago, August 3, 1902.

Text: But seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.—Matt. 6:33.

The Secret.—The Lord Jesus came all the way from Heaven to earth to give to the world the secret of true success. He not only gave to the world the secret, but like the true Leader He was and is, He wrought it out in His own life. I know the world will read with an incredulous smile the words of our text and glibly deny that they give the secret of true success. I know that many, many Christians fail to see in them inspiration to the realization of the most successful career. But notwithstanding such unbelief we are going to stand squarely upon God's Word and try to throw such light on the true meaning of this wonderful text as will enable you, by the enlightenment of the Holy Spirit, to understand and to make a new adjustment of your life, and yet find that true success which God alone can give you.

Up in the Heavens, where God has His dwelling place, the angels know the secret of success, and understand that it cannot be found apart from God. Satan, before his fall from Heaven, was in line of success with the other angels, but when he undertook to set up an independent establishment contrary to the will of God, God cast him out, and he has been in the earth ever since deluding men into the belief that apart from God they can win success.

Yes, the secret of success is known in Heaven. In obedience to the will and righteousness of God, the stars maintain their positions and send forth their flashing light; the sun and moon hold their faithful attendance upon the earth, giving light and heat, and the earth continues to revolve, bringing day and night, and moves in its orbit, bringing the change of seasons. The universe is a success and full of harmony because it obeys the supreme will of God. The angels know what success is because they seek God first and His righteousness.

The redeemed in Heaven know what true success is. Perhaps some of them did not know until they entered the pearly gates and saw their buildings of wood, hay, stubble burned up outside the gate and they escaped into Heaven "so as by fire," but they understood then that he who builds apart from God builds in vain. Success, then, was not measured by the amount of worldly wisdom, or culture, or riches, or power possessed, but by the fact that Heaven was gained and the soul saved for eternity. Lazarus, the miserable, sore-covered pauper, lying at the gate of the rich man, appeared to the world as a failure, while the gorgeously-robed man within the palace, sitting before his sumptuous table, was talked about as that successful business man. The gaze of the world sees only the beggar at the gate and the rich man in his luxurious home, but, thanks be to God! Jesus lifts the veil and gives us a glimpse into the eternal realities, where the final measuring as to failure or success is determined. There we see Lazarus in the bosom of Abraham with the peace of Heaven upon his brow, while below in hell, with a great impassable gulf between the two, we behold Dives in torment, pleading for the least degree of succor which he had denied the beggar while they were in the world together. Lazarus as a failure and he a success.

The Great Exemplar.—The absolute truth and reliability of this secret is proven by the life Christ lived here on earth, by His death and His resurrection. It would have been strange indeed, would it not? If Jesus had not lived out to the utmost the command contained in our text. Scripture gives us a glimpse of Him at the age of twelve in the temple seeking God as He sits an eager learner at the feet of the rabbis there. The veil is again drawn around Him and Scripture is silent until Jesus comes to John to be baptized and is led of the Spirit into the wilderness to engage in the most magnificent battle of the ages with Satan. The kingdoms of the world, with all their glory and magnificence, are showed to Jesus, and He sees wealth and honor and power within His grasp if He would but fall down and worship Satan. He came into the world to be a king. Here was the opportunity at one master move to become possessed of kingdoms and power. Oh, how much hung in the balance before that awful temptation! If the eye of faith of Jesus had not reached into the eternities, and he had not understood that the success which Satan could give was but temporary, He might have yielded.

Satan to-day is offering the same kind of bribe to those who will fall down and worship and serve him. To the Son of God he offered everything he had temporary power over, but to the sons of men he needs not to offer so much to win their allegiance and their service. Men are yielding every day before the power and attraction of Mammon. Present gain held up before the eyes obscures the larger reward to be found in serving God. A copper cent held before the eye is large enough to shut out the most beautiful landscape, and the world to-day lets Satan fit its eyes with glasses which reflect only the gilt and tinsel of the earth and shut out the magnificent riches and rewards of Heaven.

A Present Reward.—But don't think for a moment that the promise of "all things" is only realized beyond the grave. Satan deals largely in promises to pay which are never realized, but God pays cash here for every investment the soul makes in His Kingdom and His righteousness, and beyond the grave makes it joint heir with Jesus Christ to the riches of Heaven and the kingdoms of the world. God never equivocates. He never tries to get around one of His promises. Fulfill God's conditions and you can cash His promises here and now at one hundred cents on a dollar. And now I want to tell you that Jesus didn't have to wait until after He had risen from the dead and had ascended to His Father in Heaven before the "all these things" were added to Him, either. The "all these things" which the world was seeking after while it forgot all about God were given to Him daily. Who was it came to Him and ministered to Him after the temptation in the wilderness? Angels from Heaven! Think of it! And I tell you to-day, if we were seeking the Kingdom of God and His righteousness first—If there were no human hands to minister unto us—we should have the very same experience which Jesus had. Jesus didn't turn stones into bread at the behest of Satan, but angels brought Him bread from Heaven to strengthen His weak and tired body. He did not fall down and worship Satan and obtain the kingdoms which he held out to Him, but He heard the angels whispering to Him a Heaven-sent message that God was going to give them to Him later.

Jesus was seeking God and His righteousness, and because His hands were safe hands into which to deliver the "all things," God gave Him food enough in the wilderness to feed five thousand men besides women and children. Do you know what God will do for you, "Oh ye of little faith," if you will really and truly first seek the righteousness of God? Why, He will place the riches of Heaven and earth at your disposal and permit you to minister to the needy as Jesus did. As a Meuller did in his hundreds of orphaned children. As a Moody did in the thousands and hundreds of thousands to whom he preached and raised money lavishly to use in the Lord's work. Look at the monuments in his schools which he has left behind him as a testimonial that God here and now will give the "all these things" if only you will "seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness."

Jesus didn't have where to lay His head. He didn't have a purse. Notice that Judas, the son of perdition, carried that. The rest trusted in the keeping care of the Lord, and when tribute money was needed Peter goes down to the water's edge and takes it out of the mouth of a fish God sent. When a draught of fishes is needed to strengthen the faith of the disciples and turn their hearts from seeking the things of the world to the seeking the things of God, God fills their nets until they break. And notice that they immediately left all and followed Jesus. Do you know, I half believe that when they realized the bounty of God and His care for them, before they forsook their boats that day, they thrust back into the water that great fishy hoard, and as they darted off with glad flirts of their tails and graceful waves of their sealy sides, the disciples gave one glad look upward to the God who had given and then followed Jesus. If they never knew it before they realized that day that the Lord's fish swam in Galilee's blue waters; they knew that the Lord's birds sang in the tree tops; they knew that it was God's grain waving in the fields and God's cattle on a thousand hills, and when God knew that they had need of these things He would supply with bountiful hand.

Never was a person better fed than the prophet Elijah as he sits by the brook and God's ravens bring him bread and meat! Never was such a glorious banquet held as that out on the grassy slopes of the lake when God fed the multitude on the few loaves and fishes! God wants you to know and me to know that but one thing is needful, to seek His Kingdom and His righteousness and that He will provide the rest. Jesus cited the birds of the air and the lilies of the field to illustrate the certain care of God for His children. For, "if God so clothes the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?"

A Summer-Time Lesson.—In the section from which our text is taken, from the twenty-fourth to the thirty-fourth verses of the sixth chapter of Matthew, Jesus gives us a glorious message for contemplation during the days when nature smiles her sweetest, wooing us away from the noise and bustle and bent of the city to some quiet nook, where the grass of the field rolls away from our feet like a carpet of green to the banks of the stream which ripples and gurgles sweet music over the stones and brings quiet, calm and enchantment to our souls; where the bright flowers in the meadows which stretch away in the distance nod us a welcome and challenge even a Solomon in all his glory to display such beauty as that with which God has clothed them; where the rustling leaves in the trees overhead whisper messages from the unseen world and the birds carol with voices tuned to the Heavenly melody of the angels. Oh, then, if you will read these words of Jesus and let the soul in faith go reaching out towards God you will feel creeping into the soul a peace and rest which the world knows not of. A confidence in God such as you have never known before will take root in your soul, and you will go back to the school room, the workshop, the desk, the home, better equipped than ever to perform the task which God has given you to do.

A Practical Message.—For when Jesus tells you to "seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness" He does not mean apart from the practical and necessary duties of every-day life, but He does mean that, having centered the heart and affections upon God, for you to then work out His Kingdom and His righteousness through the task which lies just at hand, whether it is carrying up a scuttle of coal in the home, or dusting the desk of the employer in the office, or speaking a cheery word to a downcast brother you chance to meet in the street. There is a lot of nonsense preached and talked nowadays about leaving all and following Jesus; about being called out into special work for Him; about forsaking father and mother and wife and children for the Gospel's sake. We say it reverently. We do know that God calls in some cases from the office, and the workshop, and the bench, and the home, out into special and exclusive work for Him, but to the majority the call comes coupled with the admonition "let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called." God don't want you in His special service if you have not proved faithful and profitable to the employer whom you were serving, when you thought the call came. Seeking the righteousness of God means not standing out on the street corners preaching the Gospel. That may be part of it. But it means better work in the shop, more conscientious service behind the counter, more carrying of the burdens of the home, than ever before.

Paul, in the sixth chapter of the epistle to the Ephesians, gives some practical directions as to how this secret of success can be applied in a practical way to the human life and experiences. The seeking first of the Kingdom of God and His righteousness is not slipping off to church or prayer meeting to leave mother to do the dishes, but is in "honoring thy father and thy mother" by means of little thoughtful services; it is not in the clothing and feeding and housing of the wife and children alone, but "ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord;" it is not the perfunctory performance of the duty our employer has appointed us, but is "servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ; not with eye-service, as menpleasers, but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart; with good will doing service, as to the Lord and not to men;" it is not the domineering arrogance and selfish greed of the taskmaster or employer, but "ye masters do the same things unto them, forbearing threatening; knowing also that your Master also is in Heaven; neither is there respect of persons with Him."

A street-car conductor who had to work seven days in the week and fourteen hours a day told me once that a street-car man never could go to Heaven. "He didn't have time to get ready," he said. Poor fellow! how I tried to lead him to see that Jesus wanted to help him. Wanted to be with him every moment of the day, and help him gather his fares, and ring his bell, and turn his trolley, and do all the dreary drudgery. I tried to help him see that the secret of success was not in having a seat in the stock exchange, or presiding over a bank, or managing a business, unless God put him there, but the secret of success was found in seeking first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things which he was longing for would be added to him, if God, as the wise, loving, Heavenly Father, saw he needed them and they were best for him.

A few days after this experience, on one Lord's day, while on my way to a little mission church, Bible in hand, the cheery-faced conductor greeted me with a smile as he took my fare. His glance was upon the Word of God I held in my hand, and I knew the comfort of its message was abiding, like sweet incense, in his soul as he quoted various helpful passages which were dear to him. "You do think a street-car man can go to Heaven?" I said. "Go to Heaven," he exclaimed, "why, I am sure of that, and what is more I have got a little Heaven right here below, for Jesus is with me." That man, through the busy toil of the day, through the long hours of service, found the opportunity to win true success, the secret of which he had learned from Christ. The channel of his seeking after the righteousness of God was found on his swaying, rushing car, and he was trusting God for the supplying of "all these things" day by day. And he was getting them, too, for he told me so. Because God didn't give him riches or honor or great learning he did not declare God's promise had not been fulfilled, for," said he, "if God wants me on a street car, here is where I want to be, and I wouldn't change places with Rockefeller, or Pierpont Morgan, or the president of the United States." The secret of success is found while seeking first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness. We stand with the patriarchs when we stand there. We are found at the side of Christ and are among His faithful disciples. You may be unknown and unsung here in this world, but angels are speaking your name in the presence of God, and untold glories and untold honors and untold responsibilities are awaiting you in the unseen realities of God's eternity. Does it pay to serve God? Yea, verily, it means success here in this life, and beyond the grave that we shall reign with Christ as kings and priests forever. Friend, in the light of God's eternal truth and the needs of your precious soul, will you not, too, learn this secret, and "seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness" for of a truth "all these things shall be added unto you" if you do?

IN VARIOUS PLACES.

It cost over $35,000 to police the British houses of parliament last year.

England's new Pacific cable from British Columbia to Australia will cost about $7,600,000.

One of the favorite beverages in St. Pierre was cocoanut milk and rum mixed in the shell.

Owing to a Turkish imperial order the teaching of Armenian history has been prohibited in Turkey.

Among London's taverns are seven "Adam and Eves," five "Noah's Arks," and two "Jacob's Wells."

The increased importation in France of American corn meal is due chiefly to its use for fattening geese.

Although Germany has not extended its territory in Europe since 1871, yet her population has increased since then by 16,000,000.

Fairly good English was spoken by 60 per cent. of the German soldiers who visited Dublin recently while their squadron was at Kingston.

Frozen meat, which has been eaten extensively at Durban, South Africa, since the war, is held responsible for the dyspepsia prevailing in that town.

Actions against newspapers in Germany can hereafter be brought only in the town in which they are published. The Reichstag has just passed a law to that effect.

The writer of an article in the National Review traveled from Vladivostok to London in 26 days, but with compulsory delays of 15 days more, for $290, including hotel expenses.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Veils should be washed or thrown away when soiled, for the dust which collects in them is bad for the complexion.

For stiffness of the muscles caused by overexertion a very good remedy is to rub the affected muscles thoroughly with alcohol undiluted.

All acids are more or less injurious to the teeth. Medicine in which there is acid should be taken through a glass tube and the mouth rinsed with a little borax and water.

The wrinkles called "crow's feet" should be prevented by daily stroking of the folds or where they would come. Keeping the blood in free circulation under the skin is a sure wrinkle preventive.

The cockroach has been used for ages by the Russian peasantry as a remedy in dropsy. Investigations by competent persons show that the body contains an active principle. This has received the name blattic acid.

To make a first-rate hair wash shred an ounce of white soap, pour over it a quart of boiling water and stir till dissolved. When cool, add the whisked yolk of two eggs and a tablespoonful of spirits of rosemary. Cork tightly and shake well before use.

TIPS ON WALKING.

Steps that are quick are indicative of energy and agitation.

Tip-toe walking symbolizes surprise, curiosity, discretion, or mystery.

Turned-in toes are often found with preoccupied, absent-minded persons.

The miser's walk is represented as hopping, noiseless, with short, nervous, zealous steps.

Where a revengeful purpose is hidden under a feigned smile the step will be slinking and noiseless.

Slow steps, whether long or short, suggest a gentle or reflective state of mind, as the case may be.

The proud step is slow and measured; the toes are conspicuously turned out; the legs straightened.

The Cincinnati weather man gives out the following information in regard to last month.

"July just ended was the coolest in 32 years, according to the official records of the Local Weather Bureau, and the rainfall was in excess of the average. The temperature averaged but 75 degrees. On July 17 the mercury came within 4 points of reaching the century mark, and was at its lowest—59 degrees—on July 11. The day following the highest temperature. During the past month 3.47 inches of rain fell 09 inch in excess of the average."

The Hopkinsville asylum has developed more trouble for the powers that be at Frankfort. There has been a dirty mess of affairs at that asylum for years, and it is time to sweep the premises clean. It will not do to place the institution in the care of a lot of gamblers, immoral men or people who do not have sufficient fellow-feeling for unfortunates to keep them actively watchful over the weak-minded people in their charge. Give the institution a thorough cleaning, Governor.

South Carolina has a law that denies the right to sell pistols, and a dealer who has one in his possession is liable to a fine of $200 and imprisonment, the same as with those carrying them. It is expected that within a year this law will disarm 10,000 persons in that State. Kentucky should keep an eye on South Carolina, and if her law against the sale, and the carrying of pistols proves a success, she should copy it into her laws upon the first opportunity.

Attorney General Pratt has recently given an opinion that is of considerable importance to ministers who change the county of their residence. It is this: That preachers authorized to solemnize the marriage ceremony must have their authority renewed when they move into a new county. This settles the question as to where ministers have to obtain a license to solemnize the rites of matrimony, and limits them to the county in which they reside, clearly shutting out ministers who are nonresidents of the State of Kentucky, a point on which the law has been very plain, although often disregarded by County Judges.

CROP prospects in this county are about as rosy as were ever seen at this season.

Riley, that his people had moved over to the river, near East Bend bottoms. No such name was ever heard of here and although the fellow seemed honest he may belong to that numerous class of hoboes, who always have their little plot committed to memory to enlist your sympathies at meal time.

Hubert W. Northcutt authorizes us to announce the withdrawal of his name as an applicant for the Cason school. When Mr. Northcutt made application we thought he would be the teacher employed, and thought what we had said about the beauty, intelligence, bright eyes, rosy cheeks, elastic step, plump form and good appetite of the ladies of this vicinity, was what attracted him here. Two or three weeks ago we were given a tip, and now we think the withdrawal of his name was brought about by the lady who thinks she is his fragment, vetoing his coming here.

On Thursday of last week, T. J. Walton finished putting up his immense crop of hay—the largest we believe, of any in the county. Mr. Walton has crawled up the ladder leading from the cellar to the garret, a few rounds, and thinks now that he will have 100 tons. Mr. Walton invited all the men who helped him in hay harvest to meet him the following Saturday morning at 9 o'clock below his barn on Brandywine. All the men except one met promptly on time, and the time was spent, after meeting, in discussing the past and present and in partaking of a bountiful lunch until high noon. The lunch consisted of good light bread, crackers, bologna, salmon, cheese, icecream and lemonade. Our worthy weather prophet, Billy Slayback, made the address of welcome and Dan McCarty the response. LUDLOW.—The un-common council met Thursday night and had some hot arguments in reference to the vehicle ordiuance. The petition from the business men and citizens asking that the ordinance be modified so that farmers could come here and sell their produce without paying a license, was filed away. Councilman Davis made quite a lengthy speech and said he would never vote to modify or repeal the ordinance, others spoke to the same effect, and the business men and citizens were given to understand they had nothing to say about it.

The Chief of Police was called on to know why he had not made W. D. Collins, E. S. Lee, Chester Davis and T. J. McNeal pay the license on their buggies. Messrs. Collins and Lee drive into Ludlow every morning, leave their vehicles at the livery stable and take a car to their places of business in Cincinnati and Covington, (suburbs of Ludlow.) Mr. Davis is one of Ludlow's Bank officers; he drives in from Boone county. He should be made to pay the license by all means, because he is from Boone county; and McNeal, he should be made to pay on general principles; he comes here from Boone county without permission, and is to be arrested the first time he is caught on the street with a wheelbarrow, baby buggy or other vehicle. "Such is life in a big city."

The un-common council did modify the ordiuance somewhat. They instructed the Chief of Police that any person driving through the town without stopping, would not have to pay a license. So the order is to drive straight forward, neither look to the right nor left, but keep in the middle of the road, and by all means, keep off the grass.

Ludlow is a cheap city to live in—they get their coal delivered for $2 a ton, people living outside have to pay $13 a ton—$3 for coal and $10 for license.

The health of Ludlow is very good considering the amount of stale vegetables the people are consuming.

The bank men empioyed Chester Davis so as to get the business of the Boone county farmers and then charge them a license to come here and deposit their money. It's like the law firm of "I. Catchum & U. Cheatem."

The grocery men are begging the farmers to bring in their vegetables and offer to meet them outside the city limits and transfer it to their delivery wagons.

The Epworth League of Petersburg will give an entertainment at Gordon's Hall on Friday evening, August 22d. All are invited to attend and enjoy a pleasant evening. Good music, vocal and instrumental, recitations and select readings, will be the principal features of the program. Later in the evening refreshments will be served. Admission, 25 cents.

Last Friday evening Mr. and Mrs. Belden entertained about 50 of their beautiful daughter's friends, it being the most delightful party of the season. The beautiful lawn was illuminated by countless Japanese lanterns, suspended at equal distance from a wire that encircled the lawn. The night was perfect—the sky cloudless, and the lettle stars seemed to vie with eachother in their resplendence. The early hours of the evening were spent on the lawn in playing croquet and promonading. The soft, beautiful light of the Japanese lanterns intensified the beauty of the several young ladies. At 10 o'clock the guests were invited into the house, and ice cream and cake were served. After this the guests repaired to the parlor, and were given a musical treat that was highly appreciated. Those who contributed to the musical feast were Misses Elizabeth Ferris, of Evaston, Ohio; Neille Gulsinger, Georgia Parker, Eunie Willis, and Susie Walton. These young ladies are accomplished musicians and received many hearty encores. The music was so inspiring that the young guests could not resist the temptation to dance, and the latter part of the evening was thus spent. At 2 a. m. the guests repaired to their homes, singing the praises of Mr. and Mrs. Belden and their charming young daughter, who never tire in their efforts to make their guests enjoy themselves.

Text: Freely ye have received, freely give.—Matt. 10:8.

The Song of Nature.—The rising song of the birds, the brightest and sweetest of all the day, poured into my window the other morning, and the first consciousness I had was that Nature was again astir, and was giving to me her best to tune my heart to sing through all the duties of the day. Never did music sound more sweet than the song of the birds that morning as it came a freewill offering from the happy songsters. The song of the prima donna is reserved for the select audiences which can afford to pay the price of admission, but the songs of the birds are as free as the air, and the birds which woke me when my heart was tender towards God and open to the summer time teaching seemed to carol over and over again the words: "Freely ye have received, freely give."

The reveille of the feathered songsters announced the crimson tinting of the east as the first rays of golden light came creeping up the heavens, and as each succeeding note rose and fell and swelled into full song, the hum and buzz of Nature caught the refrain until the fresh morning air reverberated with the beautiful harmony. And while all Nature broke into her song of worship, the glowing sun majestically rolled above the horizon, flooding my room with brilliant light. As its golden rays filled all the place with its beauty, each dancing sunbeam seemed to sing: "Freely ye have received, freely give."

Out into the garden I went. The sparkling dew drops rested upon grass and flowers, and flashed the early morning sun like so many diamonds. Each blade of green and each bright petaled flower, robed in new beauty after the soft hand of the night had brushed away the dust and heat of the previous day, seemed to raise its face towards Heaven with grateful praise and silently sing: "Freely have we received, freely will we give."

And as the stirring breezes wafted to me their gentle perfume in generous fulfillment of the whispered promise, my soul bounded within me at the lesson which the morning had brought me, and my heart took up the refrain and I sang: "Freely, indeed, have I received, freely, too, will I give."

With glad heart and bounding step I moved under the trees and took the path which led down to the brook's verdant side. Throwing myself upon the mossy bank and taking my Testament from my pocket, I turned to the ninth chapter of II. Corinthians, the eighth verse of which, with its wealth of "all grace," "all sufficiency," "all things," and "always" lavished upon us by a loving Heavenly Father, so that we might abound "to every good work," gave back to me the message which, since all about me had been singing, and the stream rippling joyously by at my feet carried me back to my boyhood, as it seemed in musical rhythm to sing the simple little song of the soulful Fanny J. Crosby:

"Give," said the little stream, "give, oh, give; give, oh, give!"
"Give," said the little stream, as it hurried down the hill.
"I am small, I know, but wherever I go, give, oh, give; give, oh, give!"
"I am small, I know, but wherever I go, the fields grow greener still."

"Give," said the little rain, "give, oh, give; give, oh, give!"
"Give," said the little rain, as it fell upon the flowers.
"I will raise the drooping heads again, give, oh, give; give, oh, give!"
"I will raise the drooping heads again, and freshen the summer bowers."

"Give," said the violet sweet, "give, oh, give; give, oh, give!"
"Give," said the violet sweet, in its gentle spring-like voice;
"From cot and hall they will hear my call, give, oh, give; give, oh, give!
"From cot and hall they will hear my call, they will find me and rejoice."

"Give," said they all, "oh, give! give, oh, give; give, oh, give!"
"Give," said they all, "oh, give for our blessings come from Heaven."
"And we fain would give, yes, would only live, give, oh, give; give, give!"
"And we fain would give, yes would only live, to give as God has giv'n."

Give, then, for Jesus, give; give, oh, give; give, oh, give!
Give, then, for Jesus, give; there is something all can give.
Oh, do as the streams and blossoms do, give, oh, give; give, oh, give!
Oh, do as the streams and blossoms do, and for God and others live.

The Song of the World.—The message of God's Word is in harmony with the spirit of all Nature, but somehow the world has been so busy with its business of getting and keeping, sung to the tune of "Me first and the other fellow if he gets a chance," that it has not heard the sweet music of the birds and the flowers and the sunshine. It has reduced everything down to a commercial basis, and values rain and sunshine, birds and flowers, only as they can be transmuted into yellow gold.

The busy bee improves each shining hour, but as he skims from flower to flower, sipping the honey from Nature's dainty cup, he gives rich return in the fructifying pollen which his velvety sides deposit in the heart of the blossom. The beautiful reciprocal relation which one part of Nature sustains to another is little understood by the surface-living world. Its vision is limited to the present moment, and the future is ruthlessly robbed in order to realize immediate gain. Suppose the little bee should selfishly say: "I will carry no pollen to yonder flower. I'll sip the honey it has in store, but never a bit of enriching pollen will I give in return"? The little flower would die alone. No seed would fall into the ground to bring forth future plant and flower, and then from where would next season's supply of honey be drawn? No man can live unto himself alone and live as God intended He should live. The man whose horizon is narrowed down to the limits of this world may grasp the wealth of a Rockefeller, may win the financial and commercial power of a Morgan, may receive the plaudits and honor of the world, and have such poverty of soul as to render it impossible to minister unto others a single real blessing.

The Abundance of God.—Our text takes us into the presence of Jesus. He has just called His disciples into active service and, having placed the eternal riches of Heaven at their disposal, He bids them go forth, saying: "Freely ye have received, freely give." They were to give out with as bountiful a hand as God had given to them, and like the widow's cruise of oil, which failed not, their giving was always a reassurance of their faith that the source of supply would never fail. Their relations to mankind after receiving their great commission was to be adjusted upon a Divine equation, which made the giving exactly balance the receiving, and their receiving of the riches of Heaven equal the degree to which they bestowed. But in order for the disciples to have no adequate conception of the wonderful mission upon which they were about to enter, they needs must be given a glimpse into God's treasure box and understand its inexhaustible riches, and they must believe and understand that everything was at their disposal.

The agent of a certain rich man, commissioned to purchase in Europe rare paintings and statuary for the rich man's new home, was not prepared for the performance of his task until he had seen the bank book of his employer and knew just how much money was at his disposal. The servant of Jesus Christ is not ready to undertake the Divine commission, to which everyone is called, until he has allowed his spiritual vision to be quickened and he has looked into the treasure house of God, where are to be found gifts for mankind, both temporal and spiritual, and has heard the Lord say, as He does say to you and to me: "Freely ye have received, freely give." God's Word reveals to us the inexhaustible riches of Heaven. It tells us "that every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of Lights."

Think of it! All at your command as you give in the name of the Lord and are guided in the giving by God's Spirit. For we are not to cast God's pearls before swine, neither must we give the children's meat to the dogs. But we must give freely as God shows us the need, because freely have we received, and there is no limit to the supply.

The eighth verse of II. Corinthians, to which we have already referred, gives us a hint of the riches of God, which we may obtain so as to bestow upon others. Listen: "God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work." This reveals to us what was implied by Jesus' words, when He said: "Freely ye have received," and shows what the equipment of the disciples was for the mission to which they had been called.

The Gospel of Giving.—The "all grace" of God bestowed upon them included the healing of the sick, the raising of the dead, the cleansing of lepers and the casting out of devils, as special equipment for the peculiar needs of the time and the purpose of their mission. True it is that the grace of God may not include such gifts to-day, but you may be sure all the grace needful to abound in every good work will be given to the disciple of Christ who gives with overflowing love. God understands the needs of the times, and always provides the particular kind of grace required. Note that we are not to dictate what special form of grace shall be given to us. Our part is to receive the "all grace" which God is pleased to give, and then give out freely, and as we give we find the "all grace" increases instead of growing less. The grace of God rested upon Christ as He blessed the loaves and fishes to their miraculous increase, and when the fragments were gathered after all had been filled there was much more than at first. So the one peculiarity of the Gospel of giving is the certain increase in the supply.

No wonder the disciples returned to Christ after their missionary tour filled with joy. They went out in faith in the declaration of Christ: "Freely ye have received," and came back leaving behind a pathway of light and blessed joy. Acting on faith they had the evidence of having received from Christ only as they began to give. As they went forth on the naked promise, not looking to feeling or anything within themselves, and scattered throughout Palestine, the lepers found cleansing, the dead were given back to their loved ones, the sick were healed and the devil-possessed people were delivered from their awful bondage. Then they began to know such joy as only the disciple of Christ can know who gives in the name of the Master.

Here is the secret of true giving. A giving that is profligate of self and seeks alone the welfare of the recipient is the way in which Heaven gives and echoes the declaration of Christ that "He that loseth his life for My sake, shall find it." Here is the underlying motive which distinguishes the giving of the children of God from that of the giving of the world. "If ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same?" And if you give to them from whom you expect to receive in return what reward have you? "But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." And "when thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors; lest they also bid thee again and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Paul writes to the Corinthians: "I will very gladly spend and be spent for you," and to the brethren at Ephesus he preached the doctrine of giving and besought them "to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said: 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

This was the ruling motive of the apostles' life. This it was which led him "in labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft," in order that his Lord might be glorified and those with whom he came in contact blessed. While He gave to others listen to what he received: "Of the Jews five times received I 40 stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once I was stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep, in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils of mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren, in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. Besides those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches." Paul gave and as he gave God gave to Him abundantly of His grace that He might give the more. So should the disciples of Jesus Christ give. Give to others that they may receive from God.

The simplest service can be glorified by being given in the name of the Master. So many dear disciples of Christ withhold because they have no large gift of money, or talents, or abilities, forgetting that special mention is made by Scripture of the widow's mite and the cupful of cold water, while the large gifts are beheld by Christ declaring that the widow gave more than they all, and the giver of the cupful of cold water is promised a reward, while those who had prophesied in His name and done many mighty works but had left the little things undone were not recognized as disciples at all or even admitted to Heaven.

Abounding to Every Good Work.—This is a wonderful privilege and belongs to those who are disciples of Christ and who have learned the source of true power and blessing. It is the outgrowth of faith that God will "make all the grace abound," and that always, you will "have all sufficiency of all things." This is the life Christ lived. This is the lesson He taught His disciples. The Gospel message needed the fruits of good work to give it a tangible basis of operation. It must necessarily be the medium through which any effective work can be done for Christ. For "abounding to every good work" is the outward evidence of the inward possession of the "all grace of God."

It has been the privilege of the "Highway and Byway" preacher to wheel across country during the summer days, and the avenues of service to others which have opened up by the wayside have been a revelation to him. While pondering on the text we have before us a county poorhouse loomed up on one side of the road. Unexpectedly, while enjoying the charming verdure and scenery on each side of the roadway, an opportunity came of bearing the message of glad tidings to poor outcasts whom the Lord was yearning to adopt as sons, and fill with the brightness of the hope of Heaven's glory. A cheery word to each, a little card with Scripture verse upon it and a hearty "God bless you," brought a ray of light from the presence of God into their lives that will abide through time, and we pray through eternity, for the little seed sown may spring up into everlasting life through faith in Christ Jesus. As we talked of mansions in the skies which Jesus has gone to prepare for them that love Him, eyes moistened, and a new hope shone out of eyes which had been listless and discouraged when we came.

A little farther along the road we met a group of urchins, whose world was bounded by the limits of the farm. A pleasant word, accompanied by a pretty card, won their confidence, and we soon learned that they had never been to Sunday school and did not know who Jesus Christ was. But their hearts readily opened up to the thought of a Saviour and never-failing friend, and we left them absorbed in the new Friend who had come to visit them that day through the medium of my short talk.

As I pedaled along, how I rejoiced in the "all grace" of God given to me, and realized the possession as I gave in a spirit of prayer to others. It deepened the lesson I had been learning, and I determined that more of the grace of God should abound in my heart, because I gave more. Freely had I received all of God's fullness and blessing, freely would I give. Dear friend, if you would know the secret of joy and happiness, begin to give in the name of the Lord. You will be surprised at the evidences of the grace of God in your heart. Why should we not give, give, give, when we have so freely received from Him?

"I gave my life for thee;
My precious blood I shed;
That thou might'st ransomed be
And quickened from the dead.
I gave, I gave, my life for thee;
What hast thou done for Me?"

TO FILL PLACES OF STRIKERS.

Immigrants Coming Into This Country to Take the Places of Coal Miners and Others.

In 1872 Hon. William D. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, a protectionist leader in congress, said:

"Yes, men are on the free list. They cost not even freight. . . . We promote free trade in men, and it is the only kind of free trade I am prepared to promote."

This has always been the policy of the protectionists—that is, of the republican party, which has ever been the home of the protected manufacturers and the enemy of the laborer and farmer. Observe now how beautifully their system is working! J. P. Morgan and his coal, steel, railroad and steamship pals encourage great strikes, when their steampships are dumping thousands of immigrants on our shores every week, willing to work for considerably less than the coal and other strikers have been getting.

For the year ending June 30, 1902, 648,743 immigrants reached our shores; 457,711 were from Italy, Austria-Hungary and Russia. They were driven out of these countries partly by a succession of poor crops, but more especially by the very high tariff and internal taxes which prevent the people from obtaining foreign goods except at prices almost prohibitive. Thus, the lowest price for refined sugar is 11 cents in Italy, and 7½ cents per pound in Russia and Austria-Hungary, although the same sugar is sold in England for 2½ cents per pound.

Undoubtedly, also, many immigrants come over after reading the glowing promises of high wages in America made in the advertising pamphlets of Morgan's railroad and steamship lines. Certain it is that hundreds of thousands of them are here to flood the labor market and keep wages down and to increase consumption of goods and thus enable the trusts to give prices another lift. It is a beautiful system for the protected manufacturers, mine operators and railroads. As Senator John F. Miller, of California, said, in 1888:

"The average manufacturer is interested generally in two things, namely the highest protective tariff and the cheapest labor. . . . The admission of servile laborers into this country without limit. . . . means high prices for the products of manufacture and low prices for the labor that produces them."

Is it any wonder that the coal operators refused to arbitrate and that they are but little worried about the outcome of the strike? They are in no hurry to begin to operate the mines because they are getting from seven to ten dollars per ton for the surplus coal which they had stored up in anticipation of the strike.

In the meantime, they are building stockades around the mines and putting armor on cars so that when they decide to dump a few shiploads of immigrants into their mines, they can, with the assistance of Pinkertons, state militia and national guards, defy labor unions, ex-miners and public sentiment. About the only thing to worry the operators is the fact that the public is getting "nosey" and asking why the operators do not work the mines or offer to arbitrate, and is suggesting that it has some rights, that the coal was not put there in the ground for the exclusive use of a few mine owners, and that the operators, by their outrageous conduct, are taking the shortest cut to state socialism and communism. The operators are replying that the mines are their private property, and that it is none of the business of the public what they do with them.

Unquestionably, the mine owners (railroads) could, even in ordinary times, sell anthracite coal at present prices. But they are afraid of the public. They need an excuse furnished by a strike and a pretended shortage of coal. The longer the mines are left idle, the better the public will become accustomed to high prices of coal and the less reduction in prices will have to be made when mining is resumed.

Protected Pennsylvania is the state of great strikes, great riots, low wages, servile laborers, protected mills, tariff-made millionaires and politico-boss of the most obnoxious type. It is a great mill, into the hopper of which are poured ignorant foreigners and out of which runs a stream of tramps. A new and large crop of tramps will be supplied by the unfortunates in the present strike, already doomed to failure.

Should times get better in Europe and immigration from there stop, the protected manufacturers and mine operators could draw on China's horde of cheap laborers. The new Chinese exclusion act, passed at the urgent request of all the labor organizations of the country, to take the place of the expiring Geary law, was punctured so full of holes in the senate that, in the opinion of able lawyers and the American Federationist, it offers no opposition to the importation of Chinese laborers, through our colonies. The lobbies of the steamship companies, headed by Mr. Schwerin, of the Pacific Mail company, were on hand in the senate and spent thousands of dollars to make this bill look like the loop in the circus' after the acrobat had jumped through it, and the republicans performed the feat, and disregarded the requests of millions of workingmen.

BYRON W. HOLT.

——The democratic party must protect the people against the persistent assaults of selfish interests who want laws made giving them an advantage over their fellows. The republican party is the kept party of this country and plays the willing servant to these selfish interests which want special privileges. If the democratic party won't protect the people then no party will.—Toledo Bee.

RESPONSIBILITY OF TRUSTS.

Combines Prospering While the Common People Are Worse Off Than Ever Before.

In a recent editorial the Baltimore Sun discusses the topic of "Strikes and Prosperity" in a refreshingly frank vein, showing itself not in the least afraid to look the truth in the face and to analyze the significance of the existing situation, says the St. Louis Republic.

The Sun notices that, although the present is a period of national prosperity in the United States according to the ordinary acceptation of the term, there is, nevertheless, a strange unrest in the ranks of labor. The workingman is dependent upon the capitalist for employment, yet he is in revolt against his employer. This condition is not due to idle and irresponsible malice. A strike is a serious step for the workingman, and he knows it.

An investigation of the conditions of living seems to account for this dissatisfaction in the ranks of labor. The cost of the necessaries of life has advanced 20 per cent. in the past three years. This advance is due to the operation of the trust, or combine, system, great corporations gaining a monopoly of food or other necessary products, then cheapening the cost of production and advancing the price to consumers. This advance of 20 per cent. in the price of the necessaries of life falls with crushing force upon the workingman. On the other hand, a trust cheapening of the cost of production is also accomplished largely at the workingman's expense.

The ultimate meaning of these truths is that the monopoly trusts are prospering, but that the great mass of the people are now in worse plight than ever before. The workingman, the consumer, the retail dealer, the individual business man, all suffer in order that the trusts may thrive. The result is that a few hundred men in this country, the magnates in the great trust corporations, are growing immensely wealthy at the expense of the people. The evil is one that calls for prompt remedying, and the applying of the remedy is well within the people's power. The political party responsible for the creation of the trusts, and now owned body and soul by the trusts, should be removed from power in the government. The high protective tariff, which maintains the monopolies enjoyed by the trusts, should be modified to a tariff for revenue only, with duties removed from all trust products. The trust evil will disappear from American life coincident with this wise action.

OPINIONS AND POINTERS.

——It is remarkable how eager the administration newspapers are to accept Dewey's opinion of Aguinaldo, and how reluctant they are to accept Dewey's opinion of Schley.—Detroit Free Press.

——Stranger things have happened than that the tariff should finally split the republican party as free silver split the democratic party, and that the democratic party should eventually be restored to power through the issue that is subordinated in 1900.—Detroit Free Press.

——Fire-Alarm Foraker, of Ohio, says that all the other republican presidential booms except Roosevelt's are "flickering flames that some ambitions partisans are trying to fan into a blaze." Foraker's colleague, Mark Hanna, may be a "flickering blaze," but he has the money to burn, and watch him roast Foraker!—Albany Argus.

——Trust insistence that the tariff shall be held sacred is full of promise for democratic success in the near future. The "sacredness" of a system of taxation which overburdens the many for the enrichment of the few is not apparent to the people. The high protective tariff, the trusts which it has created, and the party of the tariff and the trusts must all go.—St. Louis Republic.

——There is no doubt that tariff reform and the related question of monopoly presents the most concrete and popular issue for the democrats. Thousands of republicans see that our worse-than-war tariff, in many instances 50 per cent. higher than it was when our "infant industries" were really young and needed protection, is an obstacle to justice to Cuba, a hindrance to the reciprocity for which President McKinley argued in his last speech, a prolific "mother of trusts," a bulwark to monopolies, an oppression to consumers and a baneful corrupter of politics.—N. RACIAL FEUDS IN HUNGARY.

Magyars Attempt to Dominate, Though They Are Largely in the Minority.

There have been signs of late that racial rivalries are likely to cause nearly as much trouble to Hungary as they have caused to the Austrian half of the dual monarchy, states a London paper.

Hitherto the Magyars, though they only form 45 per cent. of the population, have contrived to maintain with an iron hand their predominance over the Slav nationalities, who form 28 per cent. of the population, the Roumanians, who form 13 per cent. of the population, and the Germans, who form 12 per cent. of the total population.

The existing franchise gives the Magyars a degree of political power altogether disproportionate to their numerical strength, and both the administration of the country and popular education have been Magyarized through and through.

Recently there have been several indications that the other nationalities of Hungary will not submit quietly any longer to hold a subordinate position.

There was an angry scene in the Hungarian chamber of deputies recently, when M. Pavlovic, a Slav member, advised that he had scolded and caned several Croatian children in his constituency because they sung Magyar national songs.

In Transylvania the German newspapers have been full of articles in which the predominant Magyars were bitterly denounced and two German journalists have each been sentenced to six months' imprisonment for "inciting the people to hatred of the Hungarian state."

The law, it will be noticed, is administered by Magyars, who interpret the term "Hungarian state" as meaning their own nationality. A Magyar who abuses the Slavs or Roumanians would never be convicted for inciting to hatred of the Hungarian state.

These and other similar incidents augur trouble in the future. The Arbeiter Zeitung for one fears that racial feuds in Hungary will become far fiercer and more passionate than they have ever been in Austria.

Foiled Again.

"Villain," said the blonde and petite heroine resolutely, for she had at last pierced his disguise and knew that she must pass him up effectually or live unhappily ever after, "you are a wolf in sheep's clothing."

"Bah!" said the villain.

But this attempt to prove himself a sheep did not land, for the heroine, being a stage heroine, was not born yesterday or even 23 years from yesterday, and she knew a villain when she saw one. Consequently the hero came for her in the fifth act, the audience hissed the villain off the stage, and the curtain fell on the union of two hearts that beat as one.—Portland Oregonian.

Our Latent Nomad Instinct.

In our work we get further and further away from the earliest types of civilization, but in our play we come at times very near to prehistoric life. Our picnics are an attempt to satisfy our latent nomad instinct, our games and races are a symbol of the fierce struggle for existence which was a very real literal conflict in those far-off days, but has been modernized under the name of trade competition. And our love of shooting and fishing and hunting has no doubt been inherited from those who long ago hunted, not for pleasure, but for dinner.—People's Friend.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS.

EXTRACTING HONEY.

It Is Some Trouble to Secure It, But Additional Profits Pay for the Extra Work.

I got my early instructions in California in 1875. My first lesson was that a lazy man would make lazy bees and know that to be so. I prefer to make extracted honey as there is more profit in it. The bees that will make 100 pounds of comb honey will make 350 to 400 pounds of extracted honey if properly attended to. The railroads charge twice as much freight on comb honey as they do for extracted and the dead weight is about double. In California I have shipped 11¼ tons from 75 stands and their increase in one season, and I did not use my method of rapid increase, but could not do half that in Arizona. Everything here has small leaves and small flowers except plants whose roots can reach water, so the bees have to go to so many more flowers to get their load that a strong stand will take three weeks to fill up as much as they would do in California in one week. Last season I took out 6,960 pounds from 54 stands which is about double what my neighbors got and they thought they did very well. I use sheds and would no more think of working bees without a shed than I would think of cooking out of doors. I have tried both and I know the difference, of course it can be done so can the cooking be done. I send you a sketch of my shed and dimensions. I set them due north and south with honey house at the south end. The honey house is 12x16 with door at north end. I set my uncapping table at south end and extractor southeast corner and run the honey out through the east side of the house into a sluice running south 3 feet to a main sluice running west 9 inches wide, 2¼ deep lined with tin and covered with glass and 12 feet long, width of the house, then turn 3 feet north to house so the main sluice is not shaded by the building, just outside is a trap, an oil can cut off to 8 inches deep with a division plate extending down to within half an inch of the bottom. The can is soldered to the sluice so the top is even with the sides. In the morning I raise the glass, push it back and take out a little cake of wax and any bees, flies ants or any thing that had got into the extractor is stuck fast and put in the sun strainer. Nothing but perfectly pure honey can pass under the plate and rise 5 inches to the spout that goes into tank inside the house.—E. W. Sinclair, in Agricultural Epitomist.

TREATMENT FOR LICE.

To Keep Poultry Free from Vermin is as Essential to Success as Good Feeding.

While the food is important, it is not any more so than taking care to keep the poultry free from vermin. This is not a hard task if taken in time. Any of the lice killers used judiciously around the nests will kill the lice on the hens, but be careful not to use them too freely. Years ago I killed some very fine turkey hens by using too much. If you have neglected to treat for lice before she hatched, take the mother when she is through and thoroughly dust her with insect powder. Give her a chance to shake the powder well out of her feathers before giving her the poults, for all vermin powder injures the eyes of little ones if it gets into them. If the weather is dry and warm take each poult and rub under the throat a little thick cream, and if the wing feathers have started out well, rub them also, and put the poults back under the hen until thoroughly dry. Now, don't put much on each part. Don't grease with anything else if you have the cream, and that must be thick. If you have none, then a very little pure lard will do. Don't mix with carbolic acid or anything else. A few moth balls in the roosting places is as good as anything to keep vermin down after you once get rid of them. Little turkeys must be kept dry until they are well feathered. After the wheat is harvested they will take care of themselves, but they should roost near the house. If they roost out one night something may catch them.—Mrs. B. G. Mackey, in Reliable Poultry Journal.

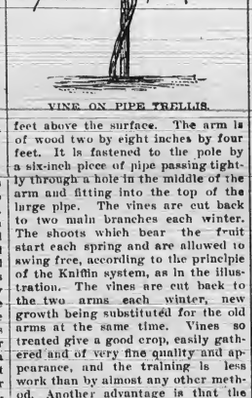
Correct Living is an Art.

There is art in everything—even in living on the farm—according to a well-known speaker at a recent meeting of a Michigan farmers' club. The farmer needs to study well the art of living, for of all men he is so situated as to best take advantage of nature's aid in this direction. The speaker urged every farmer in the country to join a club, in which he could assist in promoting the social relations of his fellows and more thoroughly enjoy the relaxation and recreation to which he is entitled. This is a part of the "art of living" on the farm.—Chicago Daily Sun.

HOW CORN ROOTS GROW.

Study of the Subject Proves That All Fertilization Should Be Through the Surface Soil.

It is by looking closely, and so reaching all the facts—in short, getting a scientific knowledge—that we make real progress in agriculture, as, indeed, in almost everything relating to nature. On the subject of the roots of corn a writer in Up-to-Date evinces such a careful examination as we have indicated. He directs attention to the fine thread-like roots near the surface, as near as they can find both heat and a moist soil. These roots, he says, spread out horizontally and are almost certain to be destroyed or pruned by the cultivator shovels. As the plant develops and has more need for food a second set of horizontal roots are formed, larger than the others. These are the main feed roots of the plant, and in loose soil they grow five to seven feet long. If the condition of soil will permit, these roots will develop at such a depth below the surface as to be safe from the cultivator shovels, but as they branch out into numerous fine fibrous roots they actually fill the fine, cultivated soil to draw food from every particle, and only shallow cultivation will prevent injury to them.



Besides the two sets of horizontal roots as described, there are usually two or more sets, beginning at or near the base of the stalk as brace roots and go straight down into the subsoil. They have been traced as deep as four feet. These vertical roots have few fibrous roots attached, but serve an important end in being able to bring moisture from the deep soil, late in the season, when droughts are likely to prevail.

As will be seen the roots of the corn plant develop as the top grows; also an understanding of the root development suggests the method of fertilization which should be through all the surface soil, and not in the hill nor in the row only. The cultivation should be done so as not to interfere with the roots that want to occupy the ground prepared for them, yet at the same time prevent evaporation of the moisture by maintaining a surface mulch of fine earth, by frequent shallow cultivation.

PIPE IRON TRELLIS.

Neat, Low in Cost, Very Durable, and Does Not Harbor Insects and Parasites.

Pole trellises of second-hand pipe and boiler tubing have given satisfaction here, being easily set up, neat, low cost and apparently very durable. The pipe was bought of a house wrecking company at three to six cents per foot, sizes one to two inches across. They come in various lengths, but are used as nearly as possible in five to six-foot pieces, being driven two feet into the earth, which brings the top three or four feet above the surface. The arm is of wood two by eight inches by four feet. It is fastened to the pole by a six-inch piece of pipe passing tightly through a hole in the middle of the arm and fitting into the top of the large pipe. The vines are cut back to two main branches each winter. The shoots which bear the fruit start each spring and are allowed to swing free, according to the principle of the Knittin system, as in the illustration. The vines are cut back to the two arms each winter, new growth being substituted for the old arms at the same time. Vines so treated give a good crop, easily gathered and of very fine quality and appearance, and the training is less work than by almost any other method. Another advantage is that the vines may be cultivated in both directions with no wires to interfere. Iron posts, too, do not harbor insects and fungus growth.—Orange Judd Farmer.

HINTS ABOUT HORSES.

Teach a horse what you want him to do, and he will always do it.

Plaster scattered on the stable floor keeps down bad odors and purifies the air.

Don't put your horse's feet in unskilled hands. Good feet are spoiled by bad shoeing.

Keep your horse feeling good by proper food and care and he will more than repay you for the little extra time you give him.

You can influence the shape of a colt's legs by keeping the feet trimmed in proper shape, the same as you can trim a growing twig.

Have your horse's teeth dressed occasionally. A little attention given to this will prevent a so-called "side driver" or "puller." It prevents sore mouth and assists mastication.

Tie your horse so that he can lie down comfortably at night. It is a practice with some grooms to tie a horse so he can't lie down, to save work in cleaning him the next morning.

Don't bring your horse in hot from a drive if you can help it; if you do, rub him thoroughly dry. A slow jog or walk for a short distance before unhitching will cool him off quicker and save much work.—Green's Fruit Grower.

BITS FOR HOUSEKEEPERS.

A Variety of Simple Suggestions Which May Come in Handy at Odd Times.

A "terrine" is a covered baking dish of glazed fireproof ware for cooking vegetables, fruits or anything requiring slow cooking. It may stand on top of the stove or in the oven, and is very desirable for any food that should be cooked a long time.

The housekeeper on the farm seldom serves soups. But if she would save the bones, the water in which meat is cooked, the bits of vegetables that would otherwise go in the fire or the swill pail she would have the foundation for a most nutritious first course. Bits of meat not sufficient in quantity to serve cold can be chopped for patties, to serve on toast, or make into croquettes, and the results are none the worse if two or three kinds are chopped and served together.

Let the housekeeper remember that economy is not going without things, but rather a wise and judicious use of time, money and materials.

When you are wondering what on earth to get for breakfast, don't forget the possibilities of fried mush, served with maple sirup. Codfish balls are another variation of the bill of fare, easily made and appetizing.

A good way to serve string beans and potatoes for luncheon on a hot day is in a salad. Wash and string the beans, cut them into strips and boil until tender in salted water. Drain and place on ice to cool. Cut the same quantity of cold boiled white potatoes into straws and put the two vegetables into a salad bowl with some minced parsley. Serve with a dressing made of two parts oil to one of vinegar and salt, pepper and onion juice to taste.

Whipped cream is an essential accompaniment of the most delicious of summer desserts, and in preparing it is important that the cream be well chilled, otherwise it will not whip stiff. Another point to remember is that it must not be too rich or it will turn butter during the whipping process. If it seems too heavy dilute with milk. While whipping the cream place the bowl in a larger bowl or pan filled with ice water or chopped ice. Add the flavoring or sweetening before or after the whipping process according to fancy. To serve with compote whipped cream prepared in this way is very good. To half a pint of rich cream allow a quarter of a cupful of milk, the juice of half a lemon, two rounded tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar and a half glass of sherry. Put all the ingredients in a bowl and whip.

THE TRIALS OF HERITAGE.

Inherited Elegance and the Troubles It Brought to Two Old Ladies.

Pride in creditable descent is commendable, and devotion to valuable family relics is also praiseworthy; but the manifestation of both these sentiments is occasionally made in a manner verging dangerously near the ludicrous, says the Detroit Free Press.

"Those dear elderly ladies next door," said a woman with an abnormal sense of humor, "although they are now a bit down in the world, poor things, they have all sorts of illustrious ancestry behind them, and are thoroughgoing bred themselves in every particular, lovely, refined, intellectual, agreeable people. But they have inherited any quantity of elegant old family silverware, and it is such a curiously laughable detail of their everyday lives. We live so near that I cannot help overhearing much of what is said over there; and almost from morning till night Miss Martha and Miss Anne say to their maid: 'Lucy, have you carried the silver upstairs? Lucy, have you carried the silver downstairs? Bring the silver, Lucy. Lucy, don't forget the silver.'

"Of course, I admire all their quaint old teapots, coffee-pots, sugar bowls, cream pitchers, and so on; I only wish I had some of them.

"The silver is a great care and anxiety to them in the winter; but in the summer it must make their lives miserable. They don't dare to leave it in the house when they go to picnics, or on boat excursions, so they take it with them! Yes, they carry it with them, in an enormous old-fashioned brown basket. Sometimes Lucy goes with them, to carry it, and sometimes they hire a half-grown boy, and then, of course, they have to watch the boy. Miss Anne told me once that a boy they hired turned a wrong corner once, and they had a terrible chase to catch him; they thought the family silver was lost for good that time.

"No, I don't believe they use the silver at picnics; they just take it with them so they know it is safe."

Nut and Raisin Filling.

A combination nut and raisin filling makes a unique and palatable pie. A large cupful each of nuts (any sort preferred) and raisins will be required. Cream to make a smooth paste should be added, and sugar sufficient to sweeten. Spread upon crusts and cover top of pie with whipped cream.—Ladies' World, New York.

Mountain Dew Cake.

One cup of sugar, one tablespoonful of butter or four tablespoonfuls of cream; white of one egg, two-thirds cup of milk, one and one-third cups of flour, one and one-half heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder.—Detroit Free Press.

All the Same to Him.

"Your hair seems to be falling out," remarked the barber, briskly wielding the shears. "I think I can save it."

"All right," said the customer. "Save it if you want to. I've got no use for it."—Chicago Tribune.

CARRIED A MENAGERIE.

This Man on the Car Has a Closed Basket Which Interests the Passengers.

The thin man looked just as if everybody in the world imposed on him. Even his mustache grew crooked. He came into the car of the suburban train sidewise, deposited his basket gingerly and slid into the seat beside it. As soon as the train cleared the tunnel the basket meowed. The thin man smiled back at the man across the aisle, and gave the basket a shake. Another meow. A little girl in the seat in front stood up on the cushion and peered at the basket, relates the New York Post.

"Like cats?" the thin man asked.

"Yep," the child answered. "Lemme see it."

"No; it might get away," the thin man said with another smile.

The basket preserved silence for several minutes, then it began to cluck. The child's eyes opened wide.

"Like chickens?" the thin man asked.

Before the child could reply the basket emitted a shrill whistle, and the man across the aisle, whose face was as puzzled as the child's, asked:

"What have you there, anyhow?"

"Mockingbird," the thin man answered.

EASY FOR THE DRUGGIST.

A Letter of Recommendation That Was Taken for a Prescription for Cough Medicine.

A young man being out of employment recently requested a former employer to give him a letter of recommendation to aid him in securing a situation. The letter was written and handed to the applicant, who was quite unable to read it, as was every person to whom it was shown. He was advised to take it to a printing office, where it could be deciphered, as compositors are noted for being able to make out the worst specimens of writing, relates London Tit-Bits.

It was handed to compositors in various offices, and in turn given up without being deciphered.

As a forlorn hope it was taken to a chemist, who, from his long experience in deciphering prescriptions, had the reputation of being able to read anything.

The man of drugs took the paper, gazed at it long and thoughtfully, and then seized an empty quart bottle and hurried round the shop, taking some fluids from sundry bottles, and finally shaking the compound vigorously. Then, handing it to the owner of the letter, he remarked to that astonished individual:

"Two shillings; and a very good cough mixture it is!"

The Kind You Have Always Bought

CONGRESSMAN ALDRICH ENDORSES THE TONIC, PERUNA.

Says: "It Will Build Up a Depleted System Rapidly."

Hon. W. F. Aldrich.

Hon. W. F. Aldrich, Congressman from Alabama, writes from Washington, D. C.:

"This is to certify that Peruna, manufactured by The Peruna Medicine Co., of Columbus, O., has been used in my family with success. It is a fine tonic and will build up a depleted system rapidly. I can recommend it to those who need a safe vegetable remedy for debility."—W. F. Aldrich.

H. S. Emory, Vice Chancellor and Master of Arms, K. P.'s, of Omaha, Neb., writes from 213 North Sixteenth street, the following words of praise for Peruna as a tonic. He says:

Catarrh of Stomach.

"It is with pleasure I recommend Peruna as a tonic of unusual merit. A large number of prominent members of the different Orders with which I have been connected have been cured by the use of Peruna of cases of catarrh of the stomach and head; also in kidney complaint and weakness of the pelvic organs.

"It tones up the system, aids digestion, induces sleep, and is well worthy the confidence of sufferers of the above complaints."—H. S. Emory.

Nervous Debility.

Everyone who is in the least degree subject to nervousness, sleeplessness, prostration, mental fatigue or nervous debility in any form, finds the hot weather of June, July and August very hard to bear, if not dangerous.

The only safe course to take is to keep the blood pure, digestion good, and sleep regular. No remedy equals in all respects, Peruna for these purposes. If the system is run down and weakened by catarrh, Peruna renovates and rejuvenates the nerves and brain.

A book on the catarrhal diseases of summer will be mailed to any address, upon request, by The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, Ohio.

The above testimonials are only two of 50,000 letters received touching the merits of Peruna as a catarrhal tonic. No more useful remedy to tone up the system has ever been devised by the medical profession.

BOONE CO., RECORDER

For Circuit Clerk.

We are authorized to announce S. E. TERRILL, of Idlewild, as a candidate for Circuit Court Clerk, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

For Jailer.

The RECORDER is authorized to announce SAMUEL ADAMS as a candidate for Jailer of Boone county, subject to the action of the Democratic party.—Primary electiyn, Aug. 23d, 1902.

HAVE the proper parties recommended names to the State Board from which to select county Election Commissioners?

AT last Edward has been crowned King of England. For a time it looked very much like he would not live to be crowned. He is not a well man yet by considerable.

TIM NEEDHAM, the new Editor of the Williamstown Courier is not a stranger to the duties and labors he has assumed, and. will keep the Courier up to its present high standard of excellency.

THE nomination of Mr. Roosevelt for the Presidency is as certain as the Republicans hold a national convention. His civil service ideas are very unsatisfactory to a large element of his party, but they will walk up and take their medicine like all good party men should.

W. N. HIND, a native of this county, is a probable candidate for Mayor of Covington. He is very popular, and a good business man. Should he become a candidate for the Democratic nomination, it will take a good one to beat him. Of course Boone county is a unit for Hind.

THE recent great political tussel of Mr. Colson with Congressman Boreing and his army of revenue officials and postmasters in the Eleventh Congressional District, has satisfied him that the "ins" will stand together, and that the "outs" stand a poor show against them.

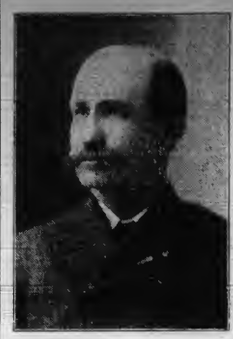
THE farmers of this county are in excellent condition as compared with their surroundings at this time last year. Corn, hay, oats wheat—each a good crop. It is now very apparent that the cribs will be filled to overflowing this fall, while bins and mows are now over taxed.

The author of the article in the Carrollton News, several weeks since, containing some ugly reflections on Railroad Commissioner McCord, has lived to experience more injury, politically, from the recoil of his unwarranted statements than he really expected to inflict upon the object of his wrath.

THE State Board of Election Commissioners will meet during the latter part of August to appoint the County Boards of Election Commissioners. Recommendations from a majority of counties have been received, and in case either party fails to submit a list from which appointments are to be made the board will act, either reappointing the old members or making appointments of their own.

ATTY. M. D. GRAY, of Williamstown, came to Burlington, last Saturday, and made a motion before Judge Lassing for the appointment of a receiver for the Grant County Building and Loan Association. This Association has been in business for several years, and the fact that its financial condition is such as to necessitate the appointment of a receiver was a startling revelation to Grant county people, who considered it a safe institution from every point of view.

SOME one has calculated that a man getting $300 every day from the beginning of the year 1 to the present time, and consuming none of his earnings, would only just now have about as much as Rockefeller. Putting it another way, imagine a town containing 3,000 working people, each earning $7 a week. The total wages earned by the people of the town in successive generations, from the time of Christ to the present day, would not exceed the amount of Mr. Rockefeller's fortune, which is generally estimated at about $200,000,000.

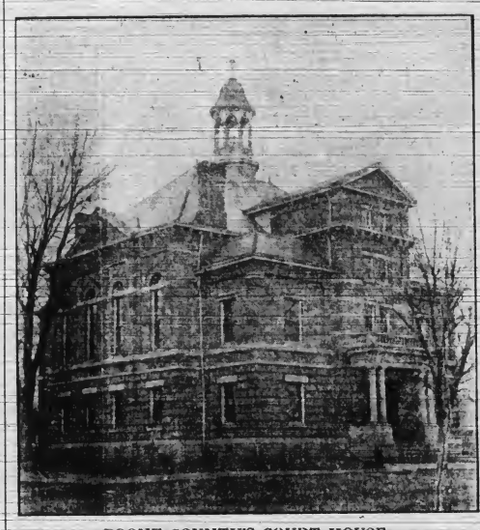


THE enormous annual consumption of sugar in the United States and the war which has been waged between the interests engaged in its manufacture, has brought this industry more than any other before the public during the last few years. The discussion before Congress on the Cuban tariff question has brought out much information concerning the manufacture of sugar and the recent decision of the Brussels conference, abolishing the bounty on sugar, has caused the consumer to think more seriously about the future of this commodity.

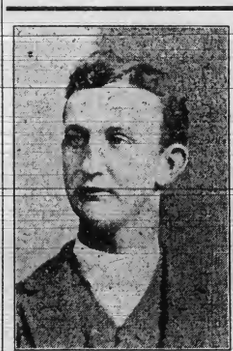
The arch over the Judge's desk in the circuit court room has been cracked badly for some time, and last Saturday a section of it let go and fell. A carpenter was put to work at once, putting in temporary bracing, to support the arch until it can be properly repaired after circuit court adjourns. The inside walls of the court house are shisters of the worst kind, and it now looks very much like a considerable portion of them will have to be torn out and rebuilt. The man who was paid to superintend the construction of the building either did not understand his business or was a fraud.

Hon. John S. Rhea was nominated by acclamation at the Bowling Green convention yesterday for a seat in the American congress. This is the fourth time this honor has come to the "Little Giant" from Logan. Though the political battles through which he has passed have been hot and fierce, and sometimes fought when dissention lurked within the ranks, he never permitted the banner to trail, but has repeatedly carried it through the fight and triumphantly planted it on the field of victory. And he will do it again. The nomination of this able and fearless Democrat means now what it has in the past, his certain election.—Franklin Favorite.

THE Teachers' Institute held in Burlington, last week, was a success in every particular. The teachers took hold of the work with an earnestness that was surprising to many. Every subject was thoroughly discussed, and a general interchange of ideas was the result. Superintendent Snyder was alive and alert, closing every subject with a timely talk. Some few of the teachers claimed to be disappointed because a professional conductor was not in charge of the Institute, but it is very doubtful if the best instructor obtainable would have been any advantage to the teachers, as nearly everyone loaned his or her best efforts to make the meeting a success, which they succeeded in doing most effectually. The teachers are to be congratulated for the success they made of their 1902 Institute without the aid or consent of a conductor at big wages.



Many opinions as to the division of the next house of representatives are being given at this time by members of the Democratic and Republican congressional committee. Both parties claim control of the lower house. The Republican managers profess to believe that the next house will be easily Republican, although they do not claim their majority will be more than 22. The Republican majority in the present house is 47, and taking into consideration the fact that the next house, by virtue of the apportionment act passed by the Fifty-sixth congress will have 29 more members than the present house, it is plain that they figure on heavy losses throughout the country. On the other hand, at Democratic headquarters in Washington, a most sanguine feeling prevails over the outlook for party gains, and preliminary estimates place the Democratic majority in the next house at 35.—Ex.



The above is a good picture of ex-Assessor Thomas G. Willis, who is the Major General commanding the Boone county force of Rough Riders at the Lawrenceburg fair today. Tom will be found in the thickest of the scrap, gallantly leading his command. We imagine we hear his commands even thus far back in the interior.

The above picture is readily recognized as that of W. D. Cropper, the handsome P. M. at Idlewild. He is 4th corporal of Company C[illegible] cannot be excelled in horsemanship. His military record is spotless, and he will astonish the natives today with his military evolutions. Keep your eye on Corporal Cropper.

BOONE COUNTY'S COURT HOUSE.
(In which Judge John M. Lassing is Dispensing Justice this week.)

The above is hardly an up-to-date picture of Courtney Walton, of Idlewild. He has a very important place on the Rough Rider program at the Lawrenceburg fair, today, and he trained down considerably for the occasion, but through all the training he retained that military bearing that is natural to him. He has, since arriving at manhood's estate, been anxious to participate in some great military undertaking, and today's Rough Rider performance is just to his liking.

The above is a good picture of Elmo Gaines, one of Gen. Willis' staff officers in the Rough Rider exploits at Lawrenceburg. Elmo is quiet but daring.

Many of the negro superstitions in Kentucky are quite interesting. An old philosopher told me with great gravity: "If you want peppahs to grow, you must git mad. My old 'oman and me had a spat, an I went right out an planted my peppahs, and they come right up." Still another saying is that peppers to prosper must be planted by a redheaded or by a high tempered person.

The negro also says that one never sees a jaybird on Friday, for the bird visits his satanic majesty to "pack kindling" on that day. The three signs in which negroes place implicit trust are the well known ones of the ground hog's appearing above ground on the 2d of February, that a hoe must not be carried through a house or a death will follow and that potatoes must be planted in the dark of the moon as well as all vegetables that ripen in the ground and that corn must be planted in the light of the moon.

The Ohio Experiment Station reports that the chinch bug is especially fond of millet and similar grasses, and where wheat fields are infested, it will be well to sow a narrow strip of millet between them and other crops. A strip of millet two or three yards wide may be sown by the side of the corn field next to infested wheat or oats, and when the bugs have taken possession of it the millet may be plowed under with a jointer plow and the ground harrowed and rolled, thus burying the bugs. Another method is to plow a deep furrow across their tracks, as they travel from field to field; the bugs in this furrow will have difficulty in getting out, and may then be killed by sprinkling them with kerosene emulsion. This may also be used where the bugs have attacked the outer rows of corn, using a spray pump and throwing it with sufficient force to wash them off the corn.

Our people should keep in mind the reunion of the Blue and Gray which will be held in Webb's woods near town, September 30 and October 1, 1902, and which promises to be the biggest affair ever seen in Grant county.

At sale of Shorthorns at Indianapolis, 41 females averaged $135,25, and four bulls $70.

THE INSTITUTE.

The Boone County Teachers' Institute convened in Burlington, August 4th, and was called to order by Supt. Snyder. Miss Nannie D. Bristow was appointed Secretary.

After devotional exercises, Rev. Sproles delivered an address of welcome to the teachers, to which T. Z. Roberts responded on behalf of the Institute.

The teachers were then enrolled, the names of whom were published last week, after which the Superintendent appointed the following committees:

On Resolutions:—William Gaines, Lillian Corbin, Edna McElroy.

On District Associations:—Ella Norman, M. J. Brough, Bettie Dolph.

On Music:—T. Z. Roberts, Sadie Kirtley, Lucy D. Clayton.

Upon the reassembling after recess, Superintendent Snyder addressed the Institute, urging co-operation on the part of the teachers in conducting the Institute.

Miss Olive Orem spoke upon Sch[illegible] Management, emphasizing the need of a knowledge of the pupil's environment to properly and justly conduct a school. Mrs. Alice Coffman read a paper on the same subject, giving much valuable advice.

M. J. Brough read a spirited essay upon school government. He was followed by D. M. Bondurant with brief remarks along the same line.

D. C. Peck responded to a call from the Superintendent, and spoke of the necessity of cooperation of parent and pupil.

W. P. Dickey gave some "experimental doctrine" that was inspiring, and urged a high standard for teachers' self government, and a set of good trustees, after which Miss Mabel Kirtley kindly cheered the Institute with an instrumental solo.

After a recess Spelling was discussed by numerous teachers and Rev. Sproles.

The afternoon session began with the introduction of Analytical Grammar, by the Superintendent, who considered it the need of the public schools. The remarks on the part of the teachers that followed the Superintendent were interesting and instructive.

J. H. Newman made an interesting and beneficial talk on Hygiene, and was followed by Miss Lizzie Roberts, who emphasized the teaching of Hygiene to the younger pupils.

TUESDAY.

Tuesday morning the Institute was opened at the appointed hour by singing and prayer.

J. H. Newman introduced Reading, which was very thoroughly discussed by numerous teachers, and Prof Dietrich, after which My Old Kentucky Home was sung, when the Institute recessed.

After recess Technical Grammar was introduced by Miss Anna Wolfe, and its discussion consumed the remainder of the morning session.

Rev. Sproles and the Hon. N. S. Walton made able talks on the subject of the use of alcohol, and the means used to abolish it.

Instrumental music by Miss Anna Wolfe and a vocal solo by Miss Ella Duncan, were pleasing diversions of the morning session.

After noon a sacred quartette, "Come Unto Me," was sung by Miss Ella Duncan, Mrs. W. L. Riddell, Rev. Sproles and T. Z. Roberts.

At this juncture of the session a very enjoyable affair occurred, the presentation of a handsome cane to D. C. Peck, of Trimble county, by a number of his former Boone county pupils. In the presentation speech the Hon. S. W. Tolin paid a high tribute to the worth of Mr. Peck as teacher, friend and adviser of youth. Mr. Peck responded in a few touching words, and those present felt uplifted by this evidence of the ties that may be formed between teacher and pupils.

Composition was discussed by William Gaines and Miss Harriet Bedinger, and the Superintendent spoke of the Teachers' and Pupils' Reading Circle, urging its importance.

Miss Nell Duncan favored the Institute with an exquisite instrumental solo, and gracefully responded to an encore.

WEDNESDAY.

After the usual devotional exercises the Institute was called to order, when Primary Reading was taken up and ably discussed by Prof. A. C. Collins, who gave the teachers the benefit of his gleanings from his recent sojourn at Athens, Ohio. Several other teachers added valuable suggestions and experiences.

D. M. Bondurant introduced a discussion upon the question, "Should the Third-class Certificate be abolished?" by warmly declaring that it is a necessity. Miss Laura Wolfe read an interesting paper on the same subject, advocating the abolishing of that class of certificate. A heated discussion followed, but a pugilistic encounter was skillfully averted by timely remarks from Attorney D. E. Crstleman.

After a brief recess Miss Lucy Clayton read a selection upon "The Teachers."

Writing, Slant and Vertical, was presented and discussed by various teachers, the Slant system seeming to be more popular. This closed the morning session.

Afternoon Hon. D. E. Castleman addressed the Institute upon the "County Board," giving various advantages and objections to this system and the present trustee system. The speech was a splendid presentation of both sides of the question.

Miss Bessie VanNess introduced Mental Arithmetic, and was followed by Miss Mary Gaines, who read an excellent paper upon this important subject. Miss Virginia Southgate, an erst-while Boone county teacher, but who has been teaching mathematics in a Northern Michigan College, gave a fine talk upon the vital importance of this subject, as did also Mr. D. C. Peck. The Superintendent closed the subjected, urging the branch as one of the most important taught, and expressed his surprise that so many teachers failed to teach it, and appealed to them to neglect it no longer

THURSDAY.

Mr. Brough introduced "Commission" with able remarks on the subject, after which a recess was taken, during which the teachers enjoyed a delicious treat in the form of melons brought by the Superintendent from the famous Bellevue melon-fields. The treat was greatly appreciated and enjoyed by the teachers.

T. Z. Robertsprseented Ratio in a manner that showed a close investigation of the subject.

After recess Superintendent C. C. Adams, of Grant county, made a stirring address upon "The Law Authorizing the Voting of a county School Tax. He is a strong advocate of the law, and his remarks were well received by the Institute. The subject was discussed by other teachers, each of whom favored the law.

W. E. Riley, of Kenton county, favored the Institute with a vocal solo, at the conclusion of which the Institute adjourned for noon.

Upon reassembling at 1 p. m. M. J. Brough introduced Civil Government. The subject was thoroughly discussed by several teachers, among them J. H. Craven, principal of a Covington High School.

Just at this juncture "Old Ky., Home (in pantomime) was greatly enjoyed, and concluded the day's session.

FRIDAY.

The Institute was opened with prayer and song Friday morning.

The first business was the appointments of vice-presidents of the Teachers' Association in the various Magisterial Districts, which was done as follows:

Burlington and Bellevue—Miss Lillian Corbin.

Rabbit Hash and Big Bone—T. Z. Roberts.

Walton and Verona—W. P. Dickey.

Constance and Florence—Wm. Gaines.

William Gaines and Ella Norman were elected a committee to aid the Superintendent in disbursing the Library Funds, arranging for the distribution of books, &c.

L. H. Voshell made a fine talk upon the new text books.

After an instrumental solo by Mrs. Carrie Myers, the Institute recessed.

When work was resumed Prof. Strother made an excellent talk upon school management, giving numerous suggestions as to punishment.

When the afternoon session convened, the superintendent read the following announcements of District Association meetings:

East Bend, September 27.
Bullittsville, October 4.
Beaver Lick, October 8.
Verona, October 25.
Pt. Pleasant, November 4.

5. That we extend our thanks to the John Church Music Company for the excellent piano furnished, and to the music committee for the sweet music.

DIED AT THIRTY SEVEN YEARS.

Carrie Goodridge departed this life on the 29th day of July, destroyed by that dread disease, consumption. As a daughter, a sister, a neighbor and a friend, she will be greatly missed. How can we then express the utter loss and sorrow of the husband walking alone—the daughter just entering womanhood, or the little daughter, who so surely needs a mother's care? But we sorrow not as others which have no hope, for Carrie had chosen that way which leads to immortality through faith in Christ Jesus our Lord. There remaineth, therefore, a rest for the people of God.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and, therefore, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucus surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

The Lexington Democrat says: "Lightning performed in freakish manner on George D. Karner's place, on Clay Mill pike, Saturday afternoon. During the storm lightning struck two stalks of corn in the same row, going down one and shattering it; the other was struck about the middle and the bolt seems to have gone upward, as the stalk was torn to shreds from the middle to the top."

On one peach farm, that of St. Fim there are employed 3,000 pickers, and has 137,000 trees, which will yield about five bushels to the tree this year. $25,000 worth of box material was purchased to pack the crop. It is said that 800 cars of peaches were shipped from this one farm alone and the crop was already sold before shipment.

An English newspaper tells of the smallest, simplest and best protected post-office in the world. It is in the Straits of Magellan, and has been there for many years. It consists of a small painted keg, or cask, and is chained to the rocks of the extreme cape in a manner so that it floats free opposite Tierra del Fuego. Each passing ship sends a lot to take letters out and put others in. This curious post-office is unprovided with a postmaster, and is, therefore under the protection of all the natives of the world. Never in the history of the unique "office" has its privileges been abused.

Senator Blackburn, of Kentucky, poured out a glass of ice water and drank it with evident satisfaction. "There isn't anything quite so good as water, after all," quoth Blackburn, "which, by the way," he added, "reminds me of a story.

"Down in Kentucky," began Mr. Blackburn, "there was a farmer, who strange to say, did not know the taste of whisky. One day, at Christmas time, he was at a neighbor's house and was invited to sample a mixture of cream, lemon, sugar, and other ingredients commonly known as egg-nog. He supped, then drank, then drained several mugs. When he started to go home he felt curious. It's an insidious drink, you know, and when he reached home he went to bed. The next morning he awoke with an awful thirst. Breaking the thin covering of ice on the water bucket out on the porch, he took one long drink.

"Mandy, Mandy, come here and bring the children,'" he shouted "'I never tasted such water in my life.'"—Washington Post.

THE FRIAR LANDS.

Nothing Is Known in Manila of Their Reported Sale.

Manila, Aug. 9.—Nothing is known here of the reported sale of the lands of the friars to an American syndicate and the statement that such a sale has been made is officially discredited.

The Dominicans transferred eight of their estates in the island of Luzon to the Philippine Sugar Estates Development Co., in which certain Americans are interested, in January, 1901. The government has questioned the legality of this transfer and the matter is now pending before the courts. Some property belonging to other religious orders here is nominally outside of the control of the church and judicial action will probably be necessary before the government purchases the friar lands. That there have been recent transfer of friar property is doubted. The status of the holdings of the friars is not believed to have changed since Gov. Taft left the Philippines for Washington last December.

NOT A CANDIDATE.

Wm. J. Bryan Says He Will Not Run For President in 1904.

Muscatine, Ia., Aug. 9.—William J. Bryan settled for all time the rumors that he will be a candidate for president in 1904 in an interview, while on the way to Danville, Ill. Col. Bryan, when shown Thursday's reports that he might again be a candidate, was much nettled, and expressed himself in no uncertain manner. He said he wanted the matter settled right now, so there could be no further question. The Mason City interview, he said, was unreliable.

"I will not be a candidate for president in 1904," said Mr. Bryan. "While I would not promise never to be a candidate again under any circumstanes, I have no plans looking to the future nomination for any office. I am perfectly content to do my work as a private citizen and enjoy my editorial work."

EXPLOSION IN A MINE.

Several Persons Killed in a Coal Shaft in Colorado.

Buildings Were Shaken and Windows Broken For a Mile Distant—Several Bodies Were Brought to the Surface.

Pueblo, Col., Aug. 8.—A special from Trinidad says:

A disastrous explosion occured at 6:30 Thursday night at No. 3 Mine at Bowen, a small camp about ten miles north of this place. Thirteen lives are known to have been lost. The exact number of men working on the night shift and in the mine at the time of the explosion is unknown. The mine is worked by the Union Coal Co., of Denver, and is a slope mine, situated on the mountain side, about 400 yards from the tipple below. The explosion occurred about 800 feet from the mouth of the slope, and was caused by fire damp.

Immediately after the night shift had started in the slope, a startling explosion occured, entirely filling the mouth of the slope and shaking buildings and breaking windows for a mile distant.

Owing to the mouth of the slope being filled the rescuers were delayed for some time, but succeeded in reaching part of the men through an old slope, and eight dead bodies were quickly brought to the surface.

The mine is filled with gas and smoke, and the rescuers are afraid of after damp and are unable to stay in the mine more than a short time. Mothers, wives and children of the dead and imprisoned miners are almost crazed with grief, and the scene presented at the mouth of the mine is a most pathetic one.

The powder house in the mine, usually containing 1,000 pounds of powder, blew up, and it is this which caused such great disaster. The general belief is that the entire mine has been ruined, and if not, it will take months to get it in working order again. The rescuers are pushing forward with all possible speed, and before many hours the exact number of lives lost and the total amount of damage done can be determined.

SOY VIOLATED INJUNCTION.

Judge Keller Nollied Hie Case on Motion of Prosecuting Attorney.

Huntington, W. Va., Aug. 8.—Among those brought before Judge Keller, of the federal court, at Bluefield, for violating injunctions, was Frank James, a lad of 12, wearing knee pants. He was charged with trespassing and posting United Mine Workers' circulars on the ground of the Elkhorn Coal & Coke Co. Tears could be seen trickling down the cheeks of the little lad as he pressed forward to the bar of justice. District Attorney Atkinson, in a sympathetic speech, referred to the boy's tender years and recommended that a nolle prosequi be entered in his case. This was done, and cheers went up from many of those assembled in the courtroom.

FOR CRIMINAL ASSAULT.

Harry Benton, Colored Boy, Lynched Near Hemer, La.

Shreveport, La., Aug. 8.—Harry Benton, a 17-year-old Negro, was lynched near Hemer Thursday afternoon for criminal assault on the 4-year-old child of D. W. Fortson. The Negro was placed upon a horse and a rope tied around the limb of a tree. A noose was fastened around his neck and some one struck the horse a blow. The animal moved forward and Benton's body swung into space. Several shots were fired into his body.

They were evenly matched, and gave a good exhibition of fast fighting.

A TERRIBLE STORM.

More Than Two Hundred Buildings Unroofed at Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 11.—A wind storm that broke about 4 o'clock Sunday morning and raged for half an hour, accompanied by lightning and rain, is said to have been the severest in 15 years. In the business streets numerous plate-glass fronts were broken, signs and awnings torn down, and rickety structures partly demolished. In the residence districts several thousand trees were overthrown and numerous windows smashed. At daybreak the sidewalks of the city were littered with rubbish and branches of trees. No loss of life or injury to persons has been reported, as few people were abroad at the time of the storm.

A peculiar feature of the storm was the drowning of several thousand sparrows. The rain came down so suddenly that they were unable to find places of shelter after having been washed from their roosts.

The city forester reports that more than 1,000 of the trees lining the boulevards were destroyed.

In Kansas City, Kan., more than 200 dwellings and other buildings were completely or partially unroofed, electric light and telephone wires were blown down, huge chimneys toppled over, hundreds of trees uprooted, and the business streets strewn with signs and awnings.

Among the buildings unroofed were the new Masonic temple, at Seventh and Ann streets; the old high school building, on the Diagonal, and the Long school building, at Seventh and Quindaro boulevard. The steeple of the Seventh Street Methodist church was blown down. Many uncompleted houses were overthrown.

DIED OF HEART FAILURE.

United States Senator James McMillan, of Michigan, Passed Away.

Washington, Aug. 11.—A dispatch was received here Sunday announcing the death of Senator James McMillan, of Michigan, at an early hour Sunday morning at his summer home at Manchester by the Sea, Mass. Death was the result of heart failure following congestion, after an illness of a very few hours. The news came as a great shock to his friends here, as when the senator left Washington shortly after the adjournment of congress he appeared to be in good health and looked forward with much satisfaction to a quiet and restful summer.

For some years Senator McMillan has made his summer home at Manchester by the Sea, having erected a very fine cottage at that place. While no information on that point has been received here, the expectation is that his remains will be taken to Detroit and be deposited in the family vault at Elmwood cemetery. The body of his son, Capt. John H. McMillan, who served in the Spanish war and who died several months ago, rests there. The senator leaves a widow, three sons, W. C., Philip and Frank, all of Detroit, and a daughter, Mrs. McMillan and her daughter accompanied the senator to Manchester after the adjournment of congress.

AT GRANT'S TOMB.

Prince Tsia Chen Placed a Handsome Floral Wreath Over the Remains.

New York, Aug. 11.—Prince Tsia Chen, of China, spent a busy day Sunday. The programme included an inspection of the fire apparatus of the New York fire department, a drive through Central park, a visit to the tomb of Gen. Grant, where he placed a wreath in memory of the great general, and a dinner at the Chinese consulate.

At the tomb the prince was escorted into the crypt, and while the party stood with bared heads Col. Middleton, the custodian, placed a handsome floral wreath, a token of respect from the prince, over the remains of Gen. Grant. The wreath was made of American beauty and white roses and laurel leaves.

A CLOUDBURST.

A Dam Broke Flooding the Country For Several Miles.

Camden, N. J., Aug. 11.—A cloudburst Sunday caused the Kirkwood lake, 12 miles from here, to break its dam, flooding the country for several miles under two to five feet of water. Four hundred feet of the embankment of the Pennsylvania's Atlantic City division were swept away. The tracks of the Reading railroad were also under water. No trains were run on the Reading road and the Pennsylvania company ran trains via New Field, abandoning its two track line. Trains were from one to two hours late.

THE PACIFIC CABLE.

President and Attorney General Consider the Company's Offer.

t ie Regarded as Essential, However, That the Conditions Agreed to Must Be Ratified By Act of Congress.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Aug. 9.—Friday afternoon the conference between the president and Attorney General Knox developed into one of the most important that has been held at Sagamore Hill.

Several months ago the Pacific Commercial Cable Co. sought permission from the executive branch of the government to lay a cable running from San Francisco via Honolulu and Guam to China, there to connect with the British cable to the Philippines. The proposition of the company was to assume all expense of laying and operating the cable. For the concessions of landings at San Francisco, Honolulu and Guam the company proposed to grant to the United States government special rates and, in certain conditions of war, practically absolute control of the cable. The conditions, as presented by the company to the president, were naturally such as any corporation might make. They had been drawn for the protection of the company's interests.

Mr. Roosevelt referred the whole subject to Attorney General Knox with a request that he go carefully over the proposed conditions, eliminating such as he might regard as impracticable and adding such others as he might believe would subserve the interests of the government. The results of his investigation and his conclusions Mr. Knox presented to President Roosevelt in verbal form, the papers in the matter previously having been laid before the president.

As President Roosevelt approved of the amended conditions and, so far as the executive branch of the government is concerned, the company now may proceed with the work of laying the cable. It is regarded as essential, however, that the conditions be ratified by act of congress, as some doubt exists of the rights of the executive branch of the government alone to grant such privileges as are included in the proposition.

The conditions as approved by Mr. Roosevelt are regarded as particularly favorable to the government and it is believed with cordial endorsement of the president, which he will give the proposition in his message next December, congress will ratify the conditions without serious delay.

Attorney General Knox added several important conditions to those proposed by the company, including these:

That the United States government at all times shall have priority of service. That the government, through the postmaster general, as is customary in such contracts, shall have the right to fix the rates to be charged by the company. That in time of war the government shall have the right absolutely to control the cable. That, in order to protect not only the government, but also individual private customers of the company, the Pacific Commercial Cable Co. is required to lay a distinct line of cable from China to Manila, so that it will not be necessary to depend upon the British company which now controls the only cable from Hong-Kong to Manila. And, finally, that the United States at any time after the completion of the cable, may purchase the line at an appraised valuation to be fixed by arbitrators selected in the usual manner by the two parties to the transaction.

GEN. FRED FUNSTON ILL.

The Attack Came Upon Him Suddenly While at His Office.

Denver, Col., Aug. 9.—Brig. Gen. Fred Funston, commander of the department of the Colorado, is ill at his home in this city. The attack came upon him suddenly at his office at army headquarters and Maj. Bushnell, of Fort Logan, who happened to be nearby, was called and attended the general.

The trouble is thought to come from the lingering effects of the fever from which Gen. Funston suffered in Cuba and in the Philippines and which has at different times impaired his health.

Brutus' Little Joke.

"Brutus," said Cassius, when Mare Antony had mobilized two or three corps of legions and got his eight-inch rapid-fire guns into play, "I have no longer any stomach for war."

"Well," replied Brutus, after his customary five minutes for thought, "having no more cæsus belli, we might as well lay down our arms."

And it took Cæsar another five minutes to figure out the deadly entendre that lay in the words of the noblest Roman of them all.—Portland Oregonian.

EDWARD VII. CROWNED.

Salutes Fired From Tower of London and Hyde Park.

The King's Procession Left Buckingham Palace at 11 O'Clock For the Abbey, Escorted By the Royal Horse Guards.

London, Aug. 9.—The eve of the coronation of King Edward VII. was marked in London by large crowds, which wandered all the evening somewhat aimlessly through the semi-illuminated streets down Whitehall, where the Canadian arch was the center of attraction, around Westminster Abbey and along the Strand. The side walks were blocked with the expectant populace. The people were deterred from any signs of rowdyism by the acute recollection of the recent postponement of the coronation and those who had seen the unrestrained exhibitions which occurred upon the slightest pretext during war times could not fail to notice the different temperament shown Friday night. A few exceptions it might well have been said of the metropolis of the empire that it was living up the national reputation of taking its pleasure somewhat sadly.

The absence of blatant hofns and annoying feathers was pleasantly atoned for by the lighting up of many buildings. The brilliancy of the illumination held the country visitors to the city so spellbound that vehicular traffic became more and more difficult as the night wore on. Until a very late hour the stand speculators did a thriving business and around those stands occupying good locations there were lines of people anxious to get seats at the last moment. Many of the thousands who walked through the streets exhibited unmistakable signs of an intention to sit up all night in the hope of securing a free coign of vantage from which to view Saturday's procession.

Salutes were fired from the tower of London and Hyde Park at sunrise Saturday morning.

The first section of the procession to the Abbey started from Buckingham palace at 10:30 o'clock and consisted of dress carriages and pairs, containing members of the royal family headed by trumpeters, the Royal Horse Guards' band, the First Life Guards and the Royal Horse Guards. Then came the carriages occupied as follows:

First—The grand duke of Mecklenburg, Strelitz, the grand duchess of Mecklenburg, Strelitz, the duke of Cambridge and Prince Frederick.

Second—Princes Andrew and George of Greece and Princesses Victoria and Louise of Battenberg.

Third—Princes Maurice, Leopold and Alexander of Battenberg, Princess Victoria Eugenie of Battenberg and Princess Beatrice (Princess Henry of Battenborg).

Fourth—The duchess of Albany, the duchess of Argyll and the crown prince and crown princess of Roumania.

Fifth—Princesses Louise and Augusta Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein and Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein.

Sixth—The Princesses Victoria Patricia and Margaret of Connaught, the duchess of Connaught and the grand duke of Hesse.

Seventh—The duke and duchess of Sparta and Prince and Princess Henry of Prussia.

Eighth—Drawn by six black horses, the Crown Prince and Crown Princess Charles of Denmark, Princess Victoria and the duchess of Fife.

After the foregoing came the Prince of Wales procession, which started from York house at 10:45. The advance guard consisted of a detachment of the Royal Horse Guards followed by two carriages containing official members of the Prince and Princess of Wales' household, the first troop of the Royal Horse Guards, the carriage of the Prince and Princess of Wales and the second troop of the Royal Horse Guards.

The king's procession left Buckingham palace at 11 o'clock, escorted by the Royal Horse Guards, the king's bargemaster and 12 watermen. These carriages then followed:

First—Sir Acland Hood, Sidney Robert Greville and Hon. Mary Dyke and Hon Sylvia Edwardes, maids of honor to the queen.

Second—Lord Knollys, the king's private secretary; Sir D. M. Probyn, keeper of the king's privy purse, and Hon. Victor Christian Cavendish, treasurer of his majesty's household.

Third—Lord Colville of Culross, lord chamberlain to the queen; Field Marshal Lord Wolseley, Vice Adm. Culme-Seymour and Hon. Charlotte Knollys, lady of the bedchamber to her majesty.

Fourth—Viscount Churchill, a lord in waiting; the Earl Pembroke lord steward of his majesty's household; the dowager countess of Litton, lady of the bedchamber to the queen and the duchess of Buccleuth, the mistress of the robes.

These carriages were followed by the personal staff to the commander-in-chief, Lord Roberts, mounted; aides de camp to the king, consisting of ten colonels of volunteer regiments, seven colonels of yeomanry regiments and nine colonels of militia regiments. Nearly all the above aides are members of the peerage. Following them came the honorary Indian aides, including Pertab Singh and the Maharajah of Gwalior, then 17 colonels of regulars, ten naval marine aides, Gen. Sir Alfred Gaselee, Adm. Sir Edward Hobart Seymour, Gen. Lord Kitchoner, the headquarters staff of the army, Lord Roberts, the commander-in-chief; 25 of the yeoman guard, six extra equerries to the king, seven equerries in ordinary, an escort of colonial cavalry, an escort of Indian cavalry and an escort of the Royal Horse Guards.

Then came the state coach conveying their majesties, attended by the duke of Connaught and Prince Arthur of Connaught, followed by the royal standard and an escort.

After these came the duke of Buccleuch, captain general of the Royal Company of Archers; Earl Waldegrave, captain of the yeoman of the guard, and the duke of Portland, master of the horse, followed by the equerries in waiting and the royal grooms.

The rear division consisted of an escort of the Royal Horse Guards and the reserve squadron of the Second Life Guards.

One of the most serious incidents of the coronation was the appearance of the uniform of the Salvation army in Westminster Abbey. King Edward decided that a representative of the Salvation army should be invited to the coronation and Bramwell Booth was appointed to attend the ceremony.

A difficulty arose about the uniform he should wear, and the earl marshal, the duke of Norfolk, intimated he was not authorized to recognize the uniform of the Salvation army. Mr. Booth thereupon wrote to King Edward requesting permission to wear the uniform of the army; this his majesty readily gave. Mr. Booth appeared in the uniform of his rank in the Salvation army.

In Westminster Abbey the scene was nothing less than marvelous. Nearly 7,000 members of the nobility, the clergy and the gentry had gathered, with foreign princes, ambassadors, colonial rulers, Indian potentates and leaders from the furthest quarters of the globe where the union jack flies, to do honor to the king. Two incidents in the service in the Abbey will live in the memory of those who witnessed them.

The first of these, which almost developed into a dramatic contretemps, centered around the aged archbishop of Canterbury. From the commencement of the service the archbishop had the greatest difficulty in reading or remembering the prayers. The book from which his almost blind eyes endeavored to read shook in his hands, and when he came to place the crown upon King Edward's head his huge frame, towering above the seated king, swayed so violently that the bishop of Winchester had to support him, while the dean of Westminster put a guarding hand under the crown.

It was evident that the archbishop of Canterbury could not see the king's head, and, after groping around, he was just about to complete the most important part of the ceremony it was discovered that he had the crown with the back to the front. Slowly he raised it, but too late to prevent the choir from prematurely bursting out with a loud "God Save the King." Amid a tension that had grown to a pitch of painful nervousness, the archbishop finally managed to place the crown correctly upon the king's head.

A few minutes later came the climax of his feebleness. He was kneeling to do the first homage of all the subjects of the king, when suddenly he almost fainted, and would have fallen upon his sovereign's knees had not King Edward tenderly, but firmly grasped both the prelate's hands and lifted him to his feet. The bishops of London, Winchester and Durham clasped their arms around the archbishop of Canterbury, the king kissed his wrinkled hand, the archbishop's head fell back, his feet moved slowly and mechanically, and thus he was more carried than led from the throne of King Edward's chapel, where he was revived.

A GIFT TO THE NATION.

King Edward Gives Osborne House to the British People.

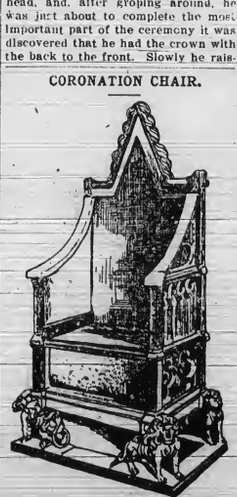
London, Aug. 11.—King Edward has signalized his coronation in a memorable manner by the munificent gift to the nation of Osborne house, one of the favorite residences of the late Queen Victoria. The gift is made in the following message to his people, addressed to Prime Minister Balfour. For reasons apparent in the document itself, his majesty makes his intention public:

"Buckingham Palace, Coronation Day, 1902.—Under the will of the king's much beloved mother, the Osborne house estate is, as Mr. Balfour is aware, the private estate of the sovereignty. Having to spend a considerable part of the year in the capital of this kingdom and in its neighborhood, at Windsor, and having also strong home ties in the county of Norfolk, which have existed now for nearly 40 years, the king feels he will be unable to make adequate use of Osborne house as a royal residence, and he, accordingly, has determined to offer the property in the Isle of Wight as a gift to the nation. As Osborne house is sacred to the memory of the late queen, it is the king's wish that, with the exception of those apartments which are in the personal occupation of her majesty, the people shall always have access to the house, which must ever be associated with her beloved name. As regards the rest of the building, the king hopes it may be devoted to national purposes and be converted into a convalescent home for officers of the navy and army whose health has been impaired in rendering service to their country.

"If in order to give full legal effect to the king's wishes, it is found that application to parliament be necessary, the king trusts that Mr. Balfour will see that the necessary steps are taken in due course taken."

London, Aug. 11.—The following bulletin concerning the king's condition was issued Sunday:

"His majesty bore the strain of the coronation ceremony perfectly well and experienced but little fatigue. The king had a good night, and his condition is in every way satisfactory. No further bulletins will be issued, signed Treves, Laking."



London, Aug. 11.—King Edward and Queen Alexandra and the royal guests at Buckingham palace attended Divine services in the chapel royal of St. James palace Sunday morning. At the close of the service the national anthem was sung. Their majesties were loudly cheered by the crowds on the streets as they drove back to Buckingham palace.

FIRE IN A TEXAS HOTEL.

Seven Persons Perished and the Structure Destroyed.

Of the 75 People in the House All Got Out With the Exception of Those Named and Three Others Not Yet Located.

San Angelo, Tex., Aug. 11.—A fire discovered in the Landon hotel at 2 o'clock Sunday morning by the night clerk destroyed the structure entirely, burning seven people to a crisp and doing a property damage of $75,000. The dead are:

Mrs. Landon, wife of the proprietor of the hotel.

Ed Hendrick, of Waco, Tex.

Mrs. Fowler, of Houston, Tex., and her grandson.

Mrs. Schullmpaky, of Houston, and two sons.

All of the bodies that have been recovered are fearfully charred and in no condition to be moved except in blankets.

When the clerk discovered the flames the interior of the dining room was a gulf of flame and he could not get through. He rushed up the main stairway, kicking in doors, calling out at the top of his voice and making noise in every way in his power. Most of the guests were aroused by this means and by the discharge of fire arms as some of the first guests got out. There were 75 people in the house and all of them got out safely with the exception of the seven named and three others who have not yet been located, but who are believed to be safe. The seven women and children got out on a small balcony and were appealed to to jump into blankets which were being held for them but they failed to do so and delayed until the gallery fell back into the flames which were licking up the big frame house.

In addition to the hotel three stables and half a dozen stores were burned, only the greatest effort preventing the whole of the business section of the town from being destroyed.

STATE NEWS ITEMS.

SUED MOTHER-IN-LAW.

Phil P. Chinn Filed Attachment Suits Against Mrs. Bessie L. Ferguson.

Lexington, Ky., Aug. 9.—Phil P. Chinn and wife Friday filed attachment suits against Mrs. Bessie L. Ferguson, widow of the noted starter, J. B. Ferguson, and mother of Mrs. Chinn. Late in the day 14 thoroughbreds belonging to Mrs. Ferguson and located at Kingston stud were levied upon. Chinn alleges that Mrs. Ferguson is indebted to him in the sum of $2,433.35, money expended by him while managing Kingston stud, which Mrs. Ferguson sold to R. L. Baker for training, developing and racing four horses and several lesser claims. He sues for recovery of the $2,433.35 and for a half interest in the high-steppers, Andrew King, Step Around and Lady Wadsworth, the thoroughbreds she has had in charge, alleging that the defendant had entered into a contract with him by which he was to receive a half interest in said horses for training, developing and racing them. He alleges in his petition that the defendant is attempting to transfer her horses to Mrs. Maud Ferguson, wife of the son of the defendant, Garnett Ferguson, of San Francisco, and unless restrained by law would ship said horses out of the state. He says this bill of sale was without consideration and entered into "for the fraudulent purpose of depriving plaintiff of his interest in said stock and to prevent him from recovering his claim or any part thereof." Mrs. Chinn sets up in her suit a claim against her mother for $1,500, subject to a credit of $400 for services as a bookkeeper and otherwise. The horses levied upon are youngsters in training.

ACCUSED OF IDLENESS.

Regulators Dash Through a Town and Whip Three Men.

Burgin, Ky., Aug. 7.—Perryville, a village southwest of here, was thrown into the wildest excitement by the appearance of about 50 men mounted on fast horses, who rode through the town, the clatter of the horses' feet awakening the people. The mob, armed to the teeth, passed swiftly through the town and out the Mackville pike to the home of Wm. Goodnight, a man about 22 years of age.

They quietly surrounded the house and called for him to come out or else be burned alive. He came, and was strapped to a post near by, while several of the party lashed him unmercifully with a cat-o'-nine-tails. They then proceeded to George Russell's home, only a short distance away, and put him through the same process, after which they gave Wallace Bottom a like call. All were informed that they could go to work or leave the country within the next 30 days, or the penalty the next time would be a rope in place of a lashing.

The following interesting letter from Prof. John Uri Loyd was received by Rev. Edgar D. Jones, of Erlanger, in response to a request for a contribution to the Church of Disciples, about to be erected in Erlanger:

Dear Mr. Jones: In reply to your letter I will say that the location where you intend to build your church is a part of my boyhood stamping ground. When a boy, very near where your church will stand, I used to do an enormous amount of fishing through the summer vacation. When school term closed then came to us the pleasures that country boys enjoy. Let me take one phase of our life, fishing along the old pike, for its sides were dotted north and south of our village (Stringtown) with blue grass ponds. I can see myself again a bare footed boy, pole (not rod) and string (not line) in hand, trudging down the pike. First we came to the pond of Ezra K. Fish, in a meadow diagonally across the pike from the lower fair ground gate, which, too, was the entrance to the Dry Creek road. Both pond and fair are gone, but Dry Creek, a wonderful fossil field, still, "creeks along." Next came the pond that breasted the very edge of the pike itself in the meadow of Milton Graves, whose house stood back in the field. That pond still exists in miniature, and standing yet in its shore on the pike edge is the very stunted sycamore tree and old root where forty years ago I sat, a barefooted boy, catching sunfish. In a recent drive out the pike I drew rein beside that gnarled root, while back to mind came the details of those long-gone delightful times. Thence we boys turned across the pike to the pond of Dr. Stevenson, which was nearly always covered with a vegetable growth of green skim. The thrifty village of Erlanger now surrounds these two pond sites, but, at the time I speak, excepting the house named, only meadow field and woodland were about. Surely no thought then possessed any one concerning a Church of the Disciples to be built in the future where nested the wild bird amid picturesque scenes of perfect rural life. Onward down the pike next we trod, the dust, stopping at the cypress-fringed pond on the beautiful Garvey place. It still holds its own in picturesque loveliness, enjoying the distinction of being the only spot on the pike where cypress trees with their strange, uncouth "cypress knees" abound.

From thence we moved onward past the Straub place, now known as The Beeches, past the Hoggins farm, opposite the tollgate, then kept by Elijah Herndon; past the field where the Shinkle House was built to the "Five-Mile House" pond. That wayside tavern still stands, enlarged, but, alas, the pond across the pike has disappeared. At the time I mention it was the largest of all ponds north of Stringtown, and the only one where catfish could be caught. Mr. Frank Rust lived on the ridge back in the distance and diagonally across from the pond in a little house on the ridge—a very little house—lived a pretty girl, Katie Callahan. Even we barefooted little fisher boys loved to look at her, and I am sure one can be pardoned for lingering a moment over a memory face such as comes when one thinks of pretty Katie Callahan. About this Five-Mile House pond, in the siege of Cincinnati, in 1862, was camped a provision train and troops of Kirby Smith. But enough. I have taken too much time with reminiscences of those happy days in the long ago, when free from care, a barefooted boy I fished in the ponds of this beautiful Stringtown ridge pike. Since then I have caught bass in Lake Erie, Saginaw trout in the famous Canada land, game fish about the Macinac Schenew waters, trout in the Rocky Mountains, mighty baracoda, yellow tail and other great fish in the wonderful waters of California's unique Catalina Island, and have fished in the most shaded waters in Florida and the Atlantic waters. But none of them have ever brought such pleasures as came to the barefoot boy who fished for sunfish, new lights and little catfish in the ponds along the Stringtown pike.

Many are the changes since those days, but the pike still stands. A string of homes, a mighty railroad and a progressive village have uprisen in the fields that lie between dear old Stringtown, yet the same and the smoky city where, in a laboratory of artificial smells I now sit memorizing over a happy past. You do not, however, ask for reminiscences, but write on business. I enclose herein a contribution as a starter for your good work, and when you are ready in the fall to make your collections, should they run short, I will duplicate the amount. With kind regards and best wishes, and wishing you success in your undertaking, I remain yours truly. JOHN URI LLOYD.

This part of the country is behind in the matter of hot weather to date.

WHAT IS THE SHAMROCK?

No Certainty as to Identity of the Irish Emblem.

There is a great deal of disputing and doubt as to what the shamrock, Ireland's national emblem, really is. At a recent meeting of the Royal Botanic society of London the identity of the plant was the chief subject of discussion. In popular estimation pretty well anyone of the species of clover answers the purpose, but it is self-evident that name cannot be equally applied to all the members of the family. For if St. Patrick ever did pick the leaf it must have been from some one particular plant. The lesser trefoil is probably the most generally recognized as the real shamrock. But is it? In Ireland itself that plant is the most popularly accepted, though the white clover may sometimes be used and occasionally the wood sorrel, in favor of which there is a great deal of weight brought to bear.

It is somewhat curious that the name of shamrock itself does not do anything to throw light on the case. Cameron, in his interesting work on the "Gaelic Names of Plants," gives "seamrog" for the Oxalis and "sambrag bhuide" for the Trefolium procumbens, which is very largely accepted for the real shamrock in many parts of the British isles. If St. Patrick used a leaf to illustrate the doctrine of trinity he could hardly have found that of Trefolium minus perfectly fitted to his case, as the terminal leaflet is distinctly stalked, as indeed it is in all the other species of this family. Hence the Oxalis fills the bill exactly. It is, perhaps, as well to let the clover stand as the symbol, because the Oxalis leaf wilts as soon as gathered, and, moreover, it is one of those things that can never be authoritatively settled.

The Irish peasants themselves have a cheerful disregard of specific identity and gather anything in any way suitable that they happen to come across, and in each case, of course, it is the "true" shamrock. Undoubtedly in Ireland Trefolium repens is most generally sold as the nation's seal.

In Gaelic the word sanhrag, before referred to, appears to be one of many forms of similar spelling, such as sameir, siomrag, etc., that are applied to the members of the Trifolium family.—American Gardening.

HE MUST HAVE BEEN.

Trunk Dealer Sizes Up Applicant as a Railway Porter.

A thin man, with a distressing cough, was inspecting some portmanteaus and trunks in front of a London West-end shop the other day, when the proprietor of the place appeared and asked:

"Looking for a portmanteau, sir?"

"Yes."

"Here's the best 30-shilling bag ever made, and I'm the only one that sells 'em at less than five pounds."

"No good," replied the thin man, with a sorrowful shake of his head. "One of these trunks wouldn't stand the journey from here to Bradford."

"What! I'll warrant 'em to go round the world. Take hold of one, and bang it about, and convince yourself."

"Do you me give me leave to test its strength?"

"Of course I do! Take hold."

The man with the distressing cough drew in a full breath, called out: "By your leave there!" as if warning a platform full of passengers, and then took hold of the trunk. Rip! went the handle; bang! went the locks; and, as he stood it on end and upset it, it flopped back again, one hinge broke loose, and it split in two.

With a twist of the wrist he gave the two halves a slam-bang, which completed the wreck; and, with a bow to the seller of portmanteaus, he joined the crowd and disappeared.

"Good heavens!" gasped the proprietor, as he viewed the ruins; "but I was mistaken in him! He's a railway porter, instead of a dying waveler!"—London Tit-Bits.

Slum Death-Rates.

An application to the London county council to clear four unsanitary areas in St. Luke's brought some surprising facts to light. In one of these areas, Garden Row, the death rate was 42 per 1,000, as against 19 for the whole of London. In none of the areas was the death rate less than double that of London, while the infant mortality ran as high as 35 per cent. The clearances will cost £140,000.

RICHWOOD.—James Carpenter sold to John Lassing his farm of 92 acres.

How many days are you going to the fair, is daily asked?

Coal seems to be a scarcity here and a bit a bushel is asked.

B. L. Cleek entertained his brother-in-law and family of St. Louis last week.

Edward Stephens and family contemplate moving to Florida in the near future.

Edward Stephens has a calf that strayed off. Information as to its where-abouts will be thankfully received.

The patrons of this post office, with few exceptions, favor the changing of its name to one not to be confused with Richmond.

The Patrons of husbandry are making great preparations for their day at the fair, and all members should assist their committee-men to make it a day to be remembered.

The many friends of Rev. Broadnax will be sorry to hear that he has resigned his pastorship of Richwood church, and shipped his household goods East, where he will make his future home. Ill health compelled him to resign.

Over two years ago Mr. Hicks was prostrated by a severe stroke of paralysis, and never fully recovered from it, and a few weeks ago he was compelled to take to his bed. Mr. Hicks was a successful trader and breeder of fine stock, and his horses, cattle and mules have been sold to parties all over the United States and many foreign countries. He owned one of the finest bluegrass farms in Kentucky. A wife and three children—Sam Hicks, Mrs. Sallie Gaines and Mrs. Eliza Garrison, survive him.

Miss Lizzie Aylor entertained a number of friends, Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Bradford were calling in Union, Sunday afternoon.

There will be prayer meeting at the Presbyterian church Sunday at 11 o'clock.

A fresh coat of paint and a new roof has improved the appearance of Dr. Crouch's residence.

Mrs. James Gatson has as her guest this week, her daughter, Mrs. Babe Stevenson, of Covington.

Mrs. Tom Brown and daughter, Cabel, of Newport, arrived Thursday for a short stay with their cousin, Miss Lillian G. Corbin.

A handsome trap passed through here Sunday, conveying several of the Electric Railway magnates to Big Bone. They are more welcome than "the flowers of May."

The Sunday School picnic, Saturday afternoon, was enjoyed immensely, and the inner man regaled to a wonderful extent. Jas Comb's lack of appetite was noted with alarm by his distressed friends.

Thos. Huron attended the Lawrenceburg fair Friday.

Robt. Franks and wife, of Grant county, are guests of relatives near here.

Jeff Carpenter, who has been sick for several days, is still in a critical condition.

Mrs. Ida Carpenter has secured the position as teacher at Beech Grove for the coming term.

Miss Ellen Rector, of Morgansville, spent Saturday and Sunday with relatives at this place.

Will Barker and sister, Miss Nellie, of Covington, are guests of their cousin, Robert Northcutt.

We will attend the fair on Saturday, and gratefully accept the Recorder's offer of a complimentary ticket.

A dog belonging to Thos. Huron showed signs of hydrophobia for several days, last week, and was killed.

Albert Tanner intends to get a new buggy soon. The other boys must "go way back," etc, now, for when the girls see Albert with his new rig, the other fellows will be the light that failed.

William H. Williams, aged 87, died Wednesday, at his home near here. He was one of the oldest residents in this vicinity, having lived here for 70 years. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Gregory, at the home of the deceased, after which the remains were interred at Independence.

LUDLOW.—There was no meeting of the uncommon council this week, therefore, there is no news from that august body, which meets every two weeks. If the citizens had the power they would only allow them to meet once every two years.

Quite a little excitement was created on the street, last Tuesday. Mr. Spinx's teams had been allowed to pass through Ludlow to the gravel bank near Bromley. But this day two of the teams stopped at a saloon to get water, and other refreshments, and thereby violated the injunction laid down by the City Fathers. The Chief of Police was notified that two wagons had stopped in town. He summoned the whole police department and when the drivers came out of the saloon they found their teams rested and arrested. After considerable parleying and guessing the teams were allowed to go on their own recoguance to appear in the police court on the 25th inst. In the excitement the police department failed to get the names of the drivers, but got the names of the horses—Tom, Bill, Jim and Sam. Cases docketed accordingly.

While all of this is going on the business of Ludlow is gradually dying. The Meranan Hardware Co., is contemplating moving to Brassfield, store away. Their sales had been cut down from $200 a week to $30 and $40 a week—other business in proportion.

If you persist in going to Ludlow you must follow these directions, to-wit: If you are stopped on the street and asked about the license just say "I am going to the bank," that is the "pass word." You drive up to the bank and ask the accommodating cashier to step out and size up your vehicle. He will tell you how much the license are—pay it, get your receipt, follow a piece of red tape to the other end of town and you will see in gold letters, "Collector's office," give him the receipt and he will give you a piece of tin which you must nail on your vehicle with clinched nails; don't give him any money, he only collects receipts, the bank handles the cash, and if you have any cash left please deposit in the bank.

If you refuse to pay your license you will be arrested, the fine is not less than $5 nor more than $30, court cost, $5.

Mike Clore has become quite a dude since he came to the city.

COMMISSARY.—On Saturday of last week, Miss Artie Ryle went on a visit to Gallatin county, and returned home the middle of this week.

Bert Parsons came down from the city, last Monday, for a week's visit.

Miss Myrah Craig is spending a few days with relatives and friends in East Bend.

Miss Emma Hunt, of Walton, spent Tuesday and Wednesday with her aged father and mother living near here.

W. T. Ryle slipped and fell off of his wagon while at the Petersburg mill, Wednesday, and stoved and bruised himself considerably, but not seriously.

Wm. Botts and wife, Clyde Berkshire and wife, Ed Botts and sisters, Miss Pearl and Fauny; Ray Grant and Miss Grace Garrison, spent last Sunday with James Botts and wife.

H. P. Passons is running his sawmill this week. When Mr. Parsons saws a log the owner gets all there is in it of value. None are more deserving of praise as a sawyer than Mr. Parsons.

As much as we have done to accommodate our neighbors in getting their mail, we think they should accommodate eachother when they can do so with little or no inconvenience to themselves.

We had the pleasure of shaking hands, last Tuesday, with our friend, Arch Acra, living in Indiana; also had the pleasure of exchauging mode of recognition with our friend, Hugh French, also of Indiauian.

The main shaft of Hewitt & Baldon's threshing engine broke Thursday as they were leaving Bert Berkshire's farm. This breakage caused others which so badly disabled the engine that they can do no more work threshing this year. It will cost at least $100 to repair the damages.

We attended the Institute week before last, and was told that as we are not a teacher and have no children to educate that we had no business there. We replied, its true we are not a teacher and have no children to educate, but we have neighbors that have and we take an interest in their education as all good citizens should. We enjoyed the Institute very much. We thought Brough and Boudurant a little "Bower like" and could not endorse all they said. The double of old "Mower" is found quite frequeutly.

The beef club that was advertised to meet for the purpose of reorganizing, met, but failed to organize from some cause; perhaps, because of some "Bower" traits of some of the old members. A new club has been organized at Miss Julia Dinsmore's through the energy and push of J. J. Walton. About all the members of the old club belong to the new, except those that have so much and many good things to eat that they have them to throw to the dogs.

WALTON, Aug. 19.—Among the visitors to our town last week, Fayette Holder, of Elliston, is to be noted, having been called to the bedside of a very sick brother, Edward P. Holder, who was slightly better up to last night. E. P.'s son-in-law, N. M. Northcutt, was also summoned, and who came out on the midnight train, Saturday night, will probably return on the "noon commuter," as it is called here.

Charles Harrold, of Verona, was over Sunday on business.

N. S. Moffit and family were entertained by Mrs. Fannie Harris and Mrs. John Watson, the other day.

Mrs. J. T. Boulton, of Covington, and Dr. and Mrs. Blackburn, of Louisville, are guests of Mrs. Ruth Hind.

Ossie Rouse had to bring his little son, Weudell, out to be dering to see his granfather, and would not be content until he was on the road.

Miss Queen Tillman is on a protracted visit to her cousin, Mrs. Turner, daughter of Col. C. A. Powers, of the B. Car Company, of Cincinnati.

Mrs. T. E. Johuson, 34, who died on Saturday night of consumption, and whose funeral was preached to a large congregation on Sunday, was laid to rest in the Baptist cemetery. She left a sorrowing husband and four children, two boys and two girls.

Mrs. W. L. Bickman, of Hamilton, Ohio, sister of Col. Fred Shafer, came out to visit him and Mrs. Shafer, but the big fire which consumed the mammoth store of Howell & Sons in Hamilton, in which her husband was employed, caused her to make a hurried return home.

The work of laying cement pavements goes bravely on. Mrs. Shafer is having 109 feet laid from the Opera House south to her mother's line, who will continue it 45 feet to connect with that laid by Willie Brittenhelm last season. These connections will make it the longest stretch of cement sidewalk in the town.

John T. Conley, of Napoleon, Gallatin county, stopped over night at the Phoenix Hotel, on his return home from the Good Roads Convention at Lexington, to which he was a delegate from Gallatin county. He is one of Gallatin's most prosperous farmers and easily gave this correspondent both cards and spades on all kinds of agricultural industry, and who did not get away from him until after 11 o'clock. I was afterwards told that he was one of the few men who had made a big success in the honey business, and that if we had struck it, I might not have got away from him in time for breakfast next morning.

It is a tolerably safe proposition to assert that when a man marries a Walton girl, his citizenship is settled for life. This has frequently been exemplified. All the members of a family removed to Louisville, and one day at which all had assembled for a sumptuous dinner, the conversation turned upon the advantage of a city life, when the latest married daughter of one of Walton's oldest families had the encomiums that were being lavished upon Louisville, with, "Yes, we can get everything we want here, but I would rather live in Walton on a crust of bread and a cup of cold water, than to live in Louisville on the best that its abundant market affords." She is here today, and she intends to stay, altho her husband can do twice or three times as well there. We know of one young couple that moved to Covington a few years ago, Mr. and Mrs. N. M. Northcutt, who, by economy and good management have made a record of which they can be very proud. Commencing with a salary that afforded a mere living, within four years time Marion Northcutt, by strict attention to business, was, on the first of the month, promoted to the position of manager of Dan Colin's great shoe emporium on Pike street. True, he has worked very hard, but it is only by hard work one succeeds.

GUNPOWDER, Aug. 18.—John H. Tanner and family were guests at Mrs. Callie Tanner's last Sunday.

Wilson Quick, who has been in Ohio for about a year, is visiting his mother here.

Ed Snyder began cutting tobacco last week. He has a fine crop of the weed.

The meetings at Hopeful are still in progress, and, in addition to those reported last week, the following have united with the church: Elbert R. Tanner, Chester L. Tanuer and Henry Dixon, Misses Eva Utz, Nettie Rouse, Susie B. Clarkson, George Swim and Wallace Rouse.

The picnic given by Hebron Sunday school last Saturday was a success in all of its features. The day was all that could be desired and a large crowd was in attendance. The Hopeful school responded to the invitation and participated in the exercises. The program consisted of music by the two schools, Hebron and Hopeful, and the following delivered some interesting addresses on Sunday school work: Rev. S. E. Slater, of Florence; Rev. Miller, of Covington; Hon. D. E. Castleman, of Burlington; Rev. T. B. Cook, of Petersburg and Mrs. Armstrong. The little folks of Hebron acquitted themselves very nicely in a drill which they had prepared for the occasion, and to say the least, it was an enjoyable affair and everybody that attended seemed to be glad they were there.

THE TWO HIGHWAYS

One Leads to Life, the Other Ends in Destruction.

The Bible Is the Guide Book and Christ the Leader—Sermon by the "Highway and Byway" Preacher.

Chicago, August 17, 1902.

Text: Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.—Matt. 7:13, 14.

The Figure.—In this text Christ has given us a figure which easily and clearly illustrates the thought that the soul in this life is moving on towards a destiny which reaches beyond time into eternity. Two gateways and two roads are mentioned, each with its destination definitely fixed; one ending in the blackness of the bottomless pit and the other reaching the eternal glories of Heaven, where the soul is clothed upon with immortality. One road is crowded with the many who press through the Wide Gate; the other echoes with the footsteps of the few who have sought and found the Strait Gate and entered in thereat. A command sounds forth in the hearing of all travelers entering these two ways which is authoritative and positive. God meets every soul and cries: "Enter ye in at the Strait Gate!" The many are so engrossed in chasing the butterfly of worldly gain and pleasure which flits just before them that they fail to hear and heed. The few stop to listen and then begin to seek; and in fulfillment of the Divine promise, "he that seeketh findeth," the little wicket gate of Bunyan's Pilgrim is seen to lie just ahead, and a knock at the door admits to the Narrow Way as it did to that earnest traveler whose journeyings we have followed with such absorbed interest.

"Broad is the road that leads to death,
And thousands walk together there;
But Wisdom shows a narrow path,
With here and there a traveler.

"'Deny thyself and take thy cross,'
Is the Redeemer's great command;
All men must count their gold but dross,
If they would gain the Heavenly land."

The Two Ways.—In the day in which the words of our text were spoken the roads or highways were the main arteries of communication and trade between cities and there was generally but one road leading from point to point, so that our Lord used an illustration which would appeal forcibly to His hearers. In this day, when the country is covered with its network of railroads, and many excellent roadways lead from city to city, the figure has lost much of its meaning. It is hard to find the city of any considerable size which is not reached by two or more roads or railroads, but in the days of our Lord there was the one road between cities over which the travel and commerce passed. Furthermore, the cities of those days were walled and gateways opened out upon the highway, and through these gateways all must pass who sought to travel by that road.

Rome had built her highways broad and long from the large cities of the then known world back to the home of the Caesars and the center of the world's power. While the commercial life of the world was flowing over these splendid highways and the many were passing to and fro bent on the worldly ambitions and aims, with Rome as the center, the devout Jew's thought and hope were centered in Jerusalem, and the narrow, rugged pathways of Palestine were traveled by the pilgrims as they journeyed toward it to keep the feast days and worship the true God. May it not have been that the thought of the two ways first came to Jesus as He journeyed towards Jerusalem when He was 12 years of age, and probably for the first time saw and crossed the great roadway built by Rome from Damascus to the south through Palestine? Here was Rome and her great highways on the one hand and Jerusalem and the narrow rugged road which led over the brow of Mount Olivet and on into the city to the temple gate on the other. There is a forcible contrast here which would have readily suggested itself to those who listened to our Lord as He spoke these words which would not at first occur to us.

A Wide Gate and a Broad Way characterize the road which leads to destruction, and a Strait Gate and a Narrow Way the road which leads to life. Why is it that man's way should be on such a grand scale and appear so attractive, and God's way so limited and the Strait Gate the reto so hard to find? The Broad Way spreads out into all the world and takes in everything and ends in destruction. The Narrow Way leads through the world to a definite point where the soul drinks in life eternal and finds full scope for its powers. The Broad Road yields a present reward at the sacrifice of the eternal welfare of the soul. The Narrow Road leads from the allurements of the world, past the pitfalls and snares of the Devil, to the sure reward of the Father's house. The Broad Road has a Wide Gate and expanding roadbed, because the Devil is the architect and he builds for time and not eternity, and seeks to give the souls of his followers all that they will ever get. The Narrow Way has a Strait Gate and contracted roadway, because this life is but a pilgrimage and the home of the soul is in Heaven.

The Two Gates.—They are alike in that they both stand at the beginning of the ways and admit the traveler to the road he seeks to travel. But the one is wide and easily entered. The other is narrow and is only found by seeking. One stands for the will of man. The other represents the will of God. The Wide Gate is attractive and gives promise beyond of all that the heart could desire or long after. In gilded letters over the archway is inscribed the word SELF, and underneath is the declaration that you can take anything with you into the Broad Road which you desire, that you can do anything you wish while in the way, and that you can find any religion to suit your fancy except the religion of the Strait Gate and Narrow Way. The Strait Gate is solid and massive and plain. It stands as a glorious triumph of the ages, and the one word "GOD" blazes forth from the keystone. And, in contrast to the declaration in the stones of the Wide Gate that those entering could take anything with them which they wished, it is specifically stated at the entrance to the Strait Gate that only those will be admitted who leave self behind and accept Christ as the new Leader.

The Guide Books.—Those which are found at the entrance to the Broad Way are almost innumerable. They are being turned out as rapidly as man can give advice and the printing press can do the printing. They all pretend to give explicit directions for the finding of success and happiness and honor and riches along the Broad Road. At the entrance to the Narrow Way the Word of God is offered to the traveler, that it may become a "lamp unto the feet and a light unto the path" which lies ahead. It makes the way plain, and sets one right when he wanders into bypaths which for a time look similar to the Narrow Way, but soon lead to difficulty and darkness and despair. It puts a song in the mouth as one journeys along the path, and inspires hope in the heart as to the certain blessing to which the Narrow Way leads. This Guide Book gives abundant biography of those who have traveled the way before. Of Noah, who spent 100 years in carrying out the one task the Lord had given him to do in building the Ark. Of Abraham, whom the Lord led out from the land of his fathers to a land which He promised to give to him as an inheritance. Of Isaac, and Jacob, and Moses, and Joshua, of Samuel, and David and hosts of others who lived before Christ came in the flesh. Of Christ Himself, Who declared that He "was the Way, the Truth and the Life," who overcame Satan and filled up many a pitfall in the way that we might follow after Him in safety.

This Guide Book also tells of those who have chosen the Broad Way and have perished miserably by the wayside. Of the people before the flood who would not listen to the word of Noah but chose their own way. Of the proud and willful at the tower of Babel. Of Sodom and Gomorrah; of the Pharaohs; of the heathen nations which withstood the onward march of God's chosen people; of Nadab and Abihu, who burnt strange fire before the Lord and were consumed; of those who through unbelief refused to enter into the promised land and perished in the wilderness; of the disobedient and faithless kings of Israel, beginning with King Saul, who, defeated in battle, fell upon his own sword, and ending with Zedekiah who was the last king of Judah before the final captivity; of the heathen kings who were punished and destroyed; of wicked Herod and his desire to kill the babe Jesus; of Judas, who pretended to be walking the Narrow Way and was on the Broad Road to destruction as he planned to betray the Christ; of the rulers of the Jews, the Scribes and Pharisees; of Pilate and Herod, and the Roman soldiers and the mocking throng which surrounded the cross. Oh, what a long list! Just take your Bible and make two lists, one of those who walked the Narrow Way and the other of those who sought the Wide Gate and Broad Road, and you will see that Scripture bears out Christ in His statement that the many are found in the way which leadeth to destruction, while the few pass through the Strait Gate into the Narrow Way which leadeth unto life.

Yes, and the true Guide Book is a faithful record, because it also tells of the failures of those who have traveled the Narrow Way. It tells how Noah got drunk; how Moses lost his patience and took glory to himself which belonged to God, when he brought water out of the rock for the complaining people; how David, a man after God's own heart, committed adultery and murder; how Peter denied his Lord, and Paul and Barnabas had a contention which was so sharp that they parted asunder. It tells of the human failures in order that we, traveling the same way, may be warned and helped thereby.

Entering the Narrow Way.—It is so easy to enter the Broad Way with its Wide Gate that it is not necessary to tell how people drift or step into it. But entering the Narrow Way is a different matter, and requires some seeking in order to find the Strait Gate through which one must pass to gain the highway. It is not always easy to strike the right road. I had occasion the other day to go to an outlying town, and as I supposed started upon the right road. Hailing a traveler passing in the other direction I asked if I was on the right road to Holmesville. "You are," he said, and on I sped, over the easy and broad road, which descended before me. Being anxious to make doubly sure that I was on the right road, a mile or so farther on I accosted an elderly man who, much to my dismay, informed me that I was all wrong and that the road to Holmesville lay back the other way, up a hill and over a difficult way. "Are you sure?" I asked, telling him that a considerable way back I had passed a man who told me I was going all right. "Well," said the old man before me, "I ought to know. I used to live near Holmesville and have been over the road hundreds of times." He then proceeded to give me instructions and describe landmarks along the way which I afterwards found were correct and made the way perfectly certain before me. Roads look a good deal alike sometimes, and it is hard to strike the right one unless we secure directions from a reliable guide—one who has been over the road we are traveling and knows to what point it leads. We have a Guide Book furnished us, but we need a Leader. The day I got on the wrong road to Holmesville I had my guide book with me, but I found I needed some one who knew the way to help me use it. So it is with the one traveling the Narrow Way. Not only does he need a Guide Book but a Leader. In order to enter the Narrow Way one has to seek for the Strait Gate. It is easy to get on one of the many paths of the Broad Way and imagine one is going safely on the Narrow Way. To really get on the Narrow Way one has to pass through the Strait Gate, and to do this one must needs meet the great Leader, Christ, who will assure the heart that it is on the right road and point out the way, every inch of which He has been over.

Chance never takes one through The Strait Gate into the Narrow Way. When one is about to start upon a journey, the road is selected and the time of the starting of the train learned. It is not mere chance that takes you to the right depot and places you aboard the train going to the point you wish to reach. With definite purpose you lay all your plans and so successfully reach the destination desired. So is it with one who travels the Narrow Way. The soul believes the declaration of the Guide Book that it is the only road which reaches the desired haven of eternal life. Thought is then taken how to enter the right road, and the Guide Book again faithfully directs the soul to the Straight Gate. As one cannot travel over a railroad without ticket or pass, so one seeking to pass over the Narrow Way must obtain properly accredited credentials. These consist of a full and free pass signed with the precious blood of Jesus Christ and certified to by God the Father. To pass through the Strait Gate and obtain one of these precious passes, which insures for one a safe journey and certainty of eternal life, one must come as a penitent and have the travel-stained garments of sin removed and be clothed upon with the righteousness of Jesus Christ. For our Guide Book declares that "all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags," and that only the blood of Jesus Christ is efficacious to cleanse from all sin. In addition to this, the human will must be surrendered and the Divine will of God accepted as the ruling factor in the life.

The Bypaths.—God wants to control entirely in the life of the one who has entered the Strait Gate and started upon the Narrow Way.

But very few yield perfect obedience to the will of God, and as a result the soul gets off into the many bypaths which are met with in the way. These bypaths seem at first to parallel the Narrow Way and appear pleasant to travel. One feels freer and the road smoother sometimes when seeking one's own will and not exactly following Christ Jesus, the Leader, over the hard and rougher portions of the Narrow Way. But the smooth and pleasant bypath which seems to skirt the difficult places in the road is but a snare, and before long leads the soul into darkness and Doubting Castle. Then it is hard work to get back to the Narrow Way again. But our Guide Book comes to our relief, and we read: "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

Sometimes the Broad Way winds its way as near to the Narrow Way as it can, and by its worldly attractions tries to lure the soul from the right path. All kinds of assurances are given that the soul can enjoy the fruits of sin for a season and get back upon the right road at last. But our Guide Book declares that "he that putteth his hand to the plow and looketh back is not fit for the Kingdom of Heaven." And on the other hand, we hear Jesus say: "Those that Thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost." If we really belong to Him He follows us into the bypaths of sin, and when we have come to ourselves, as did the prodigal son. He leads us back to the Narrow Way. Dear friend, have you wandered from the Narrow Way in which you started months or years ago? Have business cares or domestic trials taken you from your Leader's side? Have self-indulgence and love of ease caused you to stop by the wayside while your Saviour went on? Have worldly attractions and pleasures drawn you into their mad whirl? Have the demands of society been placed before and above the call of your Lord to serve Him? While you are wandering from the Narrow Way your Saviour stands waiting to clasp the lost sheep to His bosom and carry it back to the path of safety and righteousness.

The Narrow Way is the only safe and happy and prosperous way. The Broad Road leadeth to destruction, but the Narrow Way to life everlasting.

"When we walk with the Lord
In the light of His Word,
What a glory He sheds on our way!
While we do His good will,
He abides with us still,
And with all who will trust and obey.

"Then in fellowship sweet
We will sit at His feet,
Or we'll walk by His side in the way,
What He says we will do,
Where He sends we will go,
Never fear, only trust and obey."

TARIFF TAX COLLECTING.

An Example of the Beauties of the Republican Protective System.

In the last report of the secretary of the treasury there is a statement on page 144, of customs and receipts and expenditures, that shows the amount received at each port of entry and the number of persons employed to collect it and the salary they received. The receipts at some of the ports are so absurdly small that it is a wonder that Mr. Shaw, our new reformer, in charge of the treasury, does not turn his attention to a reformation of this abuse instead of following his present principal occupation of perambulating about on pleasure excursions at government expense.

The first place on the list that strikes attention is Beaufort, N. C., where the expenses of the two employes of the government were $1,494.54, while they collected only the paltry sum of $4.12. This shows that every dollar collected cost the taxpayers $362.75. Bridgeton, N. J., did not make quite as bad a showing; there the six employes of the government collected $80.17 and their expense account was $1,489.65, or $18.58 expended for each dollar collected.

At Natchez, Miss., the amount collected was five dollars and the collector received $500. This lonesome colored gentleman doubtless amused himself by sitting on the landing and watching the majestic Mississippi roll by, with an occasional spell at fishing to relieve the monotony. The New Hampshire republican politicians evidently were more powerful with the administration, for they succeeded in emabalming six of their clansmen in office at Portsmouth, who collected $278.36, receiving $3,643.31 for their laborious duties. There are a number of other ports that make returns of similar magnitude, which shows that our high protective tariff is an expensive luxury to the taxpayers, requiring expensive machinery at every spot a vessel can land. Why are these so-called ports not closed and the waste and expense of keeping collectors of customs and other officials saved? These expensive office-providing ports are among the beauties of the protective system that has generally grown up and expanded.

The politicians who control the appointment of the collector of customs and other officers fill these places with their political strikers and use them to control caucuses and conventions and assess them for contributions to campaign funds.

Hence they are all ardent protectionists, not only for the reason that the system protects their friends who control the trusts and combines, but also because it gives them an opportunity to ensconce some of their political strikers in snug berths with little or no work and good pay.

THE TRUSTS ARE THE WHOLE PUSH IN THIS SCHOOL.

ROOSEVELT'S VERSATILITY.

Hunts Trusts with the Same Strenuous Vigor with Which He Hunts Wild Animals—Nit!

It is difficult to tell when to take the republicans seriously. Many of them display great ferocity to trusts before a national election, but become quite mild and pacific when congress is in session and they have an opportunity to slay the much-hated octopus. Not a move was made against the trusts during the last session of congress by the republicans, but a few days after congress adjourned President Roosevelt began to let loose his tongue, which had before been tied, and to lash the monsters unmercifully. Just watch him make mincemeat of the trusts when he and Littlefield get at them next year! His experience hunting mountain lions and decapitating government clerks, with anti-administration views, will enable him to make quick work once he can get at these enemies of mankind.

But of course, if the trusts should "cough up the dough" in good shape this fall—well, then, of course, don't you know, while peace might not be declared, an armistice might be arranged with the trusts for a year or two. Patriotic trusts should not have the life crushed out of them ruthlessly. Keep your eye on our vacation-trust-hunting president!

——Of course, the republicans will make extraordinary efforts to hold together on trusts and the tariff, with which their party is identified and subsidized, but the revolt in Iowa, smoothed over by all the arts of practical politicians, means a great deal. The people are breaking loose as they did in 1890 and 1892.—Pittsburg Post.

VOTERS SHOULD TAKE HEED.

All Legislative Candidates Should Be Entirely Free from Corporation Influences.

Government by injunction by the federal judges has been a crying evil for years, but the late injunction granted by Judge Ketler in the case of the striking coal miners in West Virginia, in which he practically restrains their brother miners from distributing food and supplies to the starving miners in that state, is so barbarous a proposition that it will defeat itself. Public opinion is slow to anger and loath to believe that the judges of the United States courts are in league with the coal corporations, but this sweeping injunction of Judge Ketler, which in effect says that these miners are to be starved into submission to the hard terms of grasping corporations and that their wives and little ones are to be judicially murdered, that the coal bosses may get their pound of flesh, will not be indorsed by the American people. There are only two legal ways in which this judicial tool of the coal corporation can be stayed in his excesses. First by an appeal to the supreme court, and secondly by impeachment by the house of representatives. Both long and tedious proceedings and almost beyond the power of the miners to bring about, unless aided by the united protest of the people of the United States. As the senate of the United States would be the jury before whom the judges would have to be tried it is important that in voting for members of the legislature in those states where United States senators are to be elected that only those should be selected who are known to be free from corporation influence. For we have the word of Senator Morgan that one-third of the senate as at present constituted is controlled by the railroad trusts and corporations, and it requires two-thirds of the members of that body to convict any official who is impeached by the house of representatives.

A few votes in close legislative districts may decide the control of the United States senate for the next two years, as far as impeachment proceeding are concerned, and voters cannot be too careful who they elect, for they will have the electing of the senators.

FARCICAL ATTACK ON TRUSTS.

The Administration's Anti-Trust Bluff Will Not Go with the People.

Representative Griggs, chairman of the democratic congressional committee, loses no time in reminding the republicans and President Roosevelt how open to ridicule they will be for suddenly discovering that there is need of federal legislation against trusts. Do they want to make the campaign one huge joke? Or is their anti-trust demonstration merely a passing feint? Mr. Griggs puts the case pungently. While actually in session, with congress in their complete control, the republicans did not lift a finger, did not even peep or mutter, against the trusts, says the New York Post. On the contrary, they applied their fine brute majority to voting down every proposal of the democrats really to do something to restrain and punish the monopolies. How, then, can it be taken as other than pure farce, or the coolest impudence, for the republicans to go about the country declaring that it is necessary to keep them in power in order to curb the trusts? The question will be thrown into President Roosevelt's face with every speech he makes. He will be asked to state whether the whole thing is a sham, whether he has flung himself into the movement with the rash enthusiasm of youthful ignorance, or whether he has maturely considered it, and is in the fight to stay. Now we beg to assure him again that the only way in which he can make his sincerity and determination entirely clear in this business is frankly to say that he stands ready to see the tariff breastworks of the trusts leveled to the ground. If he does not mean to fight as one beateth the air, that is the blow he must be prepared to deliver.

——The republican leaders do not seem to appreciate the advantage of the democrats in this congressional contest over the tariff and the trusts. It is all the advantage of a square and honest campaign against monopoly on the one side and on the other a mere sham warfare concerning which neither the trusts nor the people are deceived.—Philadelphia Record.

SOME HEN FRUIT LORE.

The Storekeeper Was What Might Appropriately Be Called a Regular "Encyclopedia."

Seized with a turn for investigation, the reporter stopped in front of a West side store, the show window of which was filled half way to the top with nice, fresh-looking eggs. He entered the store to see if there was anything he didn't know about eggs, relates the New York Times.

"What is there new in eggs to-day?" the reporter asked the storekeeper.

"Well," said the storekeeper, picking a sad-looking article of hen fruit from a basket and handling it with care, "in this particular egg I would be willing to bet a flock of hens against a red-headed woodpecker that the newest thing is a chicken. The chicken is new, but the hen is old. Did you want some eggs?"

"No," said the reporter. "I am seeking knowledge. What is the largest egg you put on the market?"

"Oh, the Brahma is the biggest of all eggs, and the yallerist. The next, as to size and yaller, is the Houdan, with the Langshan rolling up a mighty close third. The favorite white-shelled eggs are the Leghorns, Plymouth Rocks, Hamburgs, Dominicks, and the game chicken eggs. I have 'em all, and it won't take but a minute to put you up a dozen or so of each."

"Do you know what the outcome of the different varieties of eggs is when they cease to be useful as eggs and go forth to encounter the dangers of the wide, wide world as chickens?" inquired the reporter, ignoring the exceeding bad taste of the man in talking shop.

The man put the dubious egg cautiously back in the basket and leaned thoughtfull against the counter.

"Do you know," persisted the investigator, "which egg evolves the ingredients for the deceptive fricasee? Which one is responsible for the weakness of the chicken soup that pales the boarding house tureen? Which egg contains the germs of the unrelenting assailant of the gastric juices, the insidious potpie?"

The storekeeper changed to his other foot and gazed up at the ceiling.

"Can you tell me?" the reporter went on, "against which egg will the allegation lie that foists the gutta-percha spring chicken on the confiding and unsuspecting summer boarder? Are you on to all these possibilities of the antelucubated egg?"

And the reporter paused for reply. The storekeeper put the basket of suspicious eggs out of reach.

"Am I on to 'em?" he exclaimed. "Well, somewhat! I'm what you might call an eggcyclopedia. Now, as to broilers, sonny, the Plymouth Rocks and the Brahmas hatch out the most promising, and you can put your money on the Wyandottes for second place. A Brahma or a Plymouth Rock youngster will be ready for the gridiron eight weeks after he knocks a hole through his shell, but it takes the Wyandotte a couple of weeks longer before he is fit to sizzle over the coals. The Leghorn is hardly big enough to split for the iron before four months have passed over his head, and by that time he is tolerably well fixed as to sinew, and there ain't any more juice in him than there is in a nutmeg. He's the chap the summer boarder gits to gnaw, I should reckon, and I shouldn't wonder but what, in the rough, so to speak, he stands for the supineness and the pallor of the soup that has placed the boarding house menu in the hall of fame. The Leghorn wasn't cut out for meat for man to eat. The Leghorn's destiny is eggs.

"But then! Age is the great leveler, after all, when it comes to that. There ain't much choice among any of the breeds when they have got along in years. One will make as uncertain a fricassee, as exhausted a soup, as indigestible a potpie, and as rubbery a spring chicken as t'other one will when age has stolen on.

"And let me tell you this, sonny, as to eggs. When they are in the glad heyday of youth is the time for you to grab your eggs! If you wait until to-morrow it may be too late! I can put 'em in a paper bag."

"No. Not to-day," said the reporter as he walked away, stuffed with egg lore, and the storekeeper didn't seem to like it.

Fire Chiefs in European Cities.

Very few European chiefs of fire brigades have been trained or have worked their way up as firemen. In Paris the chief must be a soldier, and the department is a regiment of infantry, placed at the disposal of the city of Paris by the war office. In Berlin the chief and most of the men are veteran soldiers, though many are artisans and mechanics. In London the chief officer is from the navy, and nine-tenths of the men under his command are sailors, while in Glasgow the chief officer a master mechanic by trade, and every fireman must be a skilled worker of some kind. In Nasso, Sweden, the fire department is made up of 150 women and the "waterworks" are four enormous water tubs.—Chicago Chronicle.

Betrayed by Garlic.

In order to trap a spiritualistic medium at Genoa garlic was secretly introduced on two occasions into the food she ate just before holding the seances. In each case the spirits she evoked are alleged to have had a strong odor of garlic about them.—London Mail.

DAIRY REFRIGERATOR.

How a Dakota Farmer Constructed an Effective Cooler at a Nominal Expense.

In 1892 I put a small room in a South Dakota creamery that would hold 600 pounds of butter, writes Buff Jersey, in Hoard's Dairyman. The creamery room was so small that the refrigerator stood only four feet from the boiler, a very trying position, but for all that the temperature was at 42 degrees. We are using a chest that I built that holds 400 pounds of one-pound prints and 300 pounds of ice. I have often weighed the drip, and, when the room was up to 96 or 100 degrees the waste was but one pound per hour. This cooler costs just $11.05 for material.

I will give as brief a description of the manner of making as possible. For a room of any size make bottom first of four or six-inch flooring. To start, cut flooring enough for first course, the width of the room is to be and length; take two by two inch strips, lay them down 18 inches apart, and on them lay two thicknesses of best odorless building paper, and on these strips nail the flooring. Turn the floor over, so naked strips will be uppermost (the strips are three inches shorter all around than the flooring). Now put on two more thicknesses of paper and lay on flooring flush with strips. Cut another set of strips three inches shorter than the floor you now have; lay on these two more thicknesses of paper, and put on a last course of flooring.

You now have two perfect dead-air spaces, which are better nonconductors than any filling, and will always be sweet. Inside of room sides are put on same as bottom, except at the corners, where, as a matter of precaution, I always put an extra thickness of paper, as I add the flooring. In height of building leave enough room overhead for ice chamber) two feet six inches is about right.) Now comes the principal feature of the room, namely, the ice racks.

Four inches below where the two foot six-inch line is from the ceiling of the cooler nail securely a two by four scantling on long way of cooler up, and three inches apart. These drip boards rest just over drain; four inches is room enough. Directly under the three-inch space and two or three inches lower down, place concave two by sixes, one end resting on drain and other end a little higher. You now have an open pan, can see ice every six inches, but no water can drop on the floor. The drip boards are not fastened, but can be taken down and washed readily. The rack for ice is not fastened, but can be removed at any time. Make doors on same plan as sides and bottom. This room, built as above, will hold the same degree of temperature at all times, and is very inexpensive. Outside can be finished with cornice and panel work if one so desires. Put on two or three coats of paint, anyway.

Steady Production Counts.

From testing the best milking cows are found out, and it is wonderful how animals are discovered to be good milkers when a whole twelvemonth is taken, which yet have never yielded a very large quantity at one time, while, on the other hand, animals which have yielded an enormous quantity over a short time and have had great notice taken of them are really poor milkers where their total yield for 12 months is summed up. The cow that yields a moderate quantity over nine, ten or eleven months is the sort to have to breed from, and it is only by a record that this is found out. In addition to this, the quality of the milk must be taken into account, and it is desirable to test this from time to time also.

Our Corn Milling Industry.

The magnitude of the corn milling industry is little appreciated. According to official figures, a total of 241,000,000 bushels of corn was ground into flour and meal in the census year, or almost exactly half the consumption of wheat. Of course a very large proportion of the corn product was used for stock food; yet, this granted, a very important quantity unquestionably went into consumption for table purposes. What a pity that Europe, proverbially hungry for cheap and wholesome food products, does not appreciate the beauties of our corn bread and "rye and Injun." —Grange Judd Farmer.

CAUSES OF FAILURE.

Valuable Suggestions Which Fruit Growers Should Turn Over in Their Minds.

In a paper published in the proceedings of the Iowa Horticultural society, John Forster points out a few of the reasons for failure.

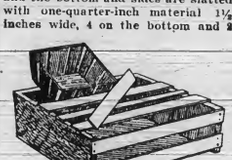
Disobeying laws which govern methods and principles, lack of judgment exercised at the right time and disappointment in our fellowmen all cause failure.

We are always seeing and hearing of failures, so it is small wonder that the horticulturist fails now and then. It may be that he neglects to prepare the ground properly, that the ground is too wet when the trees are set out and dries out hard, or that borers are allowed to injure or ruin trees. These things mean failure and yet failure does not mean that fruit growing could not be a success.

Strawberry is the first fruit of the season and requires a covering of straw. But if the covering is too heavy, the vines will be smothered; if not heavy enough they will be as tender when uncovered, that the bloom will be easily killed. The time of blooming can be controlled somewhat by the removing of the covering.

Sudden changes of atmosphere affect very seriously all berries and even the grape, apple, peach and pear.

The average fruit grower has a hatred for birds, whereas he should consider them a blessing. They may eat cherries and berries and bore holes in apples, but they also destroy innumerable slugs and curculio. The stomach of one woodpecker was found to contain 3,000 ants. If you kill the birds, do away with fertilizer and leave unused the spray-pumps, you are preparing for poor, inferior fruit.



Great care must be taken in dealing with tree peddlers as many times an altogether different plant from the one ordered, is delivered.

Many people have failed again and again, until at last they have found their vocation, so a failure does not necessarily mean that one is thoroughly incapable. It is first necessary to find one's work and then completely master it.

PACKAGE FOR PLUMS.

The Best Thing of the Kind Now Before Fruit Growers Comes from California.

One of the best choice fruit packages seen in this market is that in which California plums are received. See cut, bottom upward, to show method of ventilation. It is 16x16x4¾ inches, inside measurement. The top consists of two pieces 7¼ inches wide and three-sixteenth inch thick, and the bottom and sides are slatted with one-quarter-inch material 1½ inches wide, 4 on the bottom and 2 on each side, leaving spaces 1½ inches to 2 inches wide. Two strong cleats three-quarters by one-half inch hold the top firmly, and permit a circulation of air where the packages are piled up; and 40 1¼-inch wire nails fasten the package together. The fruit is packed in four baskets of the form shown. They are 6¼ inches square at the bottom, 8 at the top, and 4 inches deep, holding a trifle less than 3 quarts. They are made of 2 splints one-twentieth inch thick, ventilated at the corners and sides. A half-inch strip of tin pinched tightly around the top gives the basket a surprising firmness. Each basket weighs 1½ onnces, and the whole package about 3 pounds. —Rural New Yorker.

TIMELY ORCHARD NOTES.

Do not let the budded trees be tied too long.

Early pears are best ripened off the tree.

Cut the blighted pear trees below the blighted part. Burn.

This is the time to buy crates and barrels; not just when you need them.

Not all peach trees that are yellow have the "yellows;" not by any means.

Thin the fruit rather than prop the branch. Take off all little ones, all wormy ones, all imperfect ones. This gives the best a chance.

In August we get after the borers in the orchard. We find them by the wood dust around the stem of the tree. We go after them with a sharp knife and a small wire. If we do not get the job done in August we do it in September.

Every farm should maintain a few plum trees. They bear in a few years, and bear heavily if a good variety be chosen. Select a variety well known to be hardy, prolific and of large size, then plant in the poultry yard, protected while young by wire screening.

Don't plant that young orchard close with the intention of cutting out each second tree when the branches commence to interfere, because this course demands a man of heroic temperament, and the chances are that you are not built that way. No insinuation as to your other kinds of courage, you know!—Farm Journal.

FASHION'S LATEST MANDATES

Pretty Bits of Feminine Finery That Are in Evidence the Current Season.

Trimmings are, if possible, more elastic than ever. Many bands of hand-painted satin are bordered with black chenille. Glace-silk flowers, applique with gold or tinsel thread on thin fabrics such as lama, voile or barege, hand embroidered in colored chenille and tinsel threads, applique flowers of hand-embroidered silk, broderie Anglaise and raised flowers of chiffon are only a few of the many novelties, says the Chicago Daily News.

Cream lace veils are draped over flowers or twists of chiffon on many of the hats, but the effect of a very thin brim is not always "happy." Green and old rose straws are trimmed with branches of red currants, and the "pain brule" or tan-colored straws are exceedingly smart, and look best trimmed with black velvet or black flowers. Some curious new straws look as if they were made of spun glass, and the variety of different straws is bewildering.

Veils hold an important part in the summer wardrobe. Notwithstanding they are warm and not half so pretty as the lace draping that finishes so many modish hats; still, they protect the complexion to an extent. There is always the face veil of dotted mesh, and the double ones with white tulle underneath a black-net veil. With these, oftener than otherwise, is pinned loosely to the hat a long chiffon or grenadine veil, worn thrown back in a rather picturesque fashion. The green veils are holding their rivalry with the brown of all shades. The old-fashioned tambour lace veils are fashionable, and are worn so that they can be turned from the face or fall over it. In buying a lace veil it is well to get the best, as it wears longer, is the more satisfactory, and holds its shape to the last.

For highly wrought dresses a deal of voiles and veilings have been used, and what is styled the shot effect in veilings promises to give that material new fashionableness. It is gained merely by using a contrasting silk under plain veiling. Biscuit color is seen over green, pink, blue or corn color. Green and blue make the most favored combination and green and lilac form another striking union. Veiling is soft, clinging and very cool, even when subjected to much elaboration. The sun-plaited skirt, gored to flare around the feet and stitched around the hips perfectly flat in yoke form, is seen in this fabric. Lines of open work down front and sides add to the effect of length when this is desired. Some plaited skirts have sewn around the hem a band of velvet ribbon to match the material sewn around the hem. This gives, it is claimed, all the weight that is needed.

WANTED TO GET HARDENED.

The Lawyer Expected to Go to New Jersey for a Time, and Was Preparing for It.

"So you are going camping?" said the bank clerk to the young lawyer on the next floor.

"Going to start for the Adirondacks to-morrow; how did you guess it?" was the rather surprised reply, relates the New York Tribune.

"Why, I happened to see a book on your desk entitled "Camping; or, How to Live Outdoors," said the bank clerk.

"I think I got some good points out of that book," answered the lawyer, as he pulled a set of tablespoons out of his pocket. "There are about a dozen of us in the party, all men, and we are going to be gone about three weeks."

"Shouldn't wonder if you find that long enough," said the bank clerk. "Twelve are too many. I have tried the experiment, and know whereof I speak. In such a party you are bound to get two kinds of men, one being the nervous man and the other the lazy man. The nervous man is up in the morning before everybody else, and is so exhilarated with the crisp, cool air that he lins to sing and wake up all the rest. Then, if he gets into some difficulty, the nervous man starts up a row by blaming some other one of the party for his stupidity. He never wants to stop in one place more than a few hours, and keeps the camp on the move and at a qui vive the whole time. The lazy man, on the other hand, has for his motto: 'Never do for others what they will do for you.' He is always shirking his work, wants to go to bed before the rest, and then swears if the others keep him awake. Accordingly, you had better have a small company, and well picked, than too great and indiscriminate a crowd."

"Sounds like good advice," said the would-be camper, as he took a hammer out of his hip pocket and some nails from his waistcoat.

"Have you got a wash for your face and hands to keep off the mosquitoes?" asked the bank clerk, after he had looked over the various utensils which his friend had laid in stock.

"Yes, and I have some cholera pills, as well as some whisky and quinine, to take against malaria."

"But how did you happen to think of going camping this year, instead of spending the time at Newport?" at last asked the bank clerk.

The lawyer looked as if this question had at last cornered him, and then he said:

"You see, our family is going over to New Jersey to live after next month, so I thought I'd learn how to rough it in advance."

OUR SCHOOLS LEAD.

English Professor Praises Technical Institutions of Country.

Says That While England's Schools Excel in Pure Science, Our Methods Are Superior in Practical Training Given.

Prof. R. A. Redmayne, professor of mining in the new technical school of the University of Birmingham, England, who has been in this country for several weeks, studying our technical schools has returned from the west and sailed for England. Before his departure he said:

"I have found the excellent reputations your American technical schools enjoy in Europe to be fully, even more fully than I expected, justified by the schools. What impressed me most, I think in your American methods of technical instruction is the practical training you give. Your graduates are metallurgists; so are ours; your graduates are mining engineers; so are ours; but your graduates can build bridges, design and run locomotives, meet any and all emergencies and local needs wherever they may be placed. It is this broad, practical working power you give your students that has given American engineers such a splendid reputation in South Africa, Australia and elsewhere that I have observed.

"I think," the professor continued, "that we excel you in pure science. But we of England—and here seems to be the difference between Yankee and Briton—we are too prone to end with a scientific discovery, while you consider no discovery complete till you have it in practical, even commercial, working operation. Another way in which you have an advantage over us is that you are not so hampered here by legislation. In England a young man is required by law to have five years' experience under ground before he can take his examinations for mining engineer. You, then, may come to us to learn of pure science, we to you to learn practical application—the exchange should prove helpful to both nations."

SAW THE BUILDING IN TWO.

Stubborn Owners of a South Omaha Block Make a Peculiar Division of Their Property.

The stubbornness of two men is causing a most peculiar division of property to be made in South Omaha, Neb. A business block in that town is being sawed into two equal halves, and each man will dispose of his half as he sees fit. The building is owned jointly by the Storz Brewing company and B. Jetter, a South Omaha brewer. It is a structure 12 feet wide, 50 feet deep, and one story high. The ground it covers lies between a saloon owned by the Storz company and another owned by Jetter.

Of the 12 feet Storz owns five feet and Jetter seven. Until Jetter wanted to build the store was rented, and each took his portion of the rent. Jetter refused to rent his seven feet, and Storz refused to sell to Jetter.

City Engineer Beal was called in, and the exact property line was given and men were put to work sawing the building into parts. The part belonging to Jetter will be removed to make room for his new building.

In order to make the exact division, a large plate-glass window will have to be cut nearly in the center. Storz will have a room four feet five inches wide and 50 feet deep.

Mrs. Esther M. Milner, De-Graff, Ohio, writes:

"I was a terrible sufferer from female weakness and had the headache continually. I was not able to do my housework for my husband and myself. I wrote you and described my condition as near as possible. You recommended Peruna. I took four bottles and was completely cured. I think Peruna a wonderful medicine and have recommended it to my friends with best results." —Mrs. E. M. Milner.

Miss Mamie Groth, Platteville, Wis., writes: "Accept a grateful girl's thanks for the wonderful help I have received through the use of Peruna. Although I looked well and strong I have for several years suffered with frequent backache and would for several days have splitting headaches. I did not wish to fill my system with poisonous drugs, and so when several of my friends advised me to take Peruna, I asked my physician what he thought of it. He recommended it and so I took it and am entirely without pain of any kind now." —Miss Mamie Groth.

For Circuit Clerk.

We are authorized to announce S. E. TERRILL, of Idlewild, as a candidate for Circuit Court Clerk, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

[Home and Farm.]

The putting away of potatoes is always in a general sense a big item—a matter of more or less importance to almost every farmer.

All who grow potatoes should know how to make the most of them, in the sense of caring for them properly after they are grown, and yet many of those who produce potatoes fall far short of this desirable result. We want to show how good potatoes can be kept good during the whole of the regular storage season.

At its best the potato is one of the best of vegetables. At its worst it is one of the poorest. Often the fault of its being inferior is in the cooking; often it is in the storage. Attention will now be directed to the latter, this being the time of year—the time of year for the digging of the main crop—when attention to it urgently begins.

Potatoes are stored with success both in cellars and in the open ground. The tubers should be kept dry and in the dark whilst being stored. When potatoes are exposed to the light they become green, and all green potatoes—green in whole or in part only—are wholly unfit for food.

The right sort of potato cellar is the best of all places for storing the potato, because in the cellar it can be reached at any time. When it is stored in the open air the weather conditions have to be considered in opening the pit to obtain supplies.

In the properly-constructed cellar it is comparatively easy to secure and maintain the essentials in this business—ventilation, by which pure air can be regularly supplied, and a temperature as low as possible without falling below the freezing point.

Many potatoes are stored in pits and come out of them in first-class condition—better often than they do out of cellars as ordinarily constructed and left to take care of themselves.

In those parts of the country where the winter is severe the covering of the pit must be sufficient to keep out the frost, as frost operates in the open air.

It is customary under these circumstances to begin the covering with a coating of straw—a few inches of straw is here sufficient—and then put just enough earth on top of the straw to hold the straw in place.

This will do until the very severe weather begins to show itself. The menace of the first approach of severe weather should be taken as a sign for the putting on of all the additional earth needed for full winter protection. Over this earth put some more straw and arrange to prevent the straw from being blown off by wind.

At the top of the pit there should be one or more spaces for admitting air, the number of such openings depending on the length of the pit. They should go clear down to the layer of straw, immediately in contact with the tubers.

This is the simple, yet important, arrangement for ventilation, and in good practice and with care bestowed on the details it works all right.

When the frost comes, and as long as it is present, fill these openings with straw well pressed down.

The potato pit should be made on high ground—ground above the level of that commonly around—from which water easily runs away.

Arrange the tubers so that when they are ready to be covered they will show a volume gradually becoming smaller until the top is reached.

Of course, the amount of soil used in covering will vary. In view of the help which the straw used gives, the soil put on need never, when it is all in place, be quite equal to the depth to which frost commonly penetrates in the fields of the neighborhood. The quality of the potato being much influenced by the manner in which it is stored, and remembering that there are still even in these days of advanced agriculture, quantities of naturally good potatoes largely damaged for want of proper care, it is hoped that these sggestions, which indicate the true course to take, will prove helpful to many.

A last thought—so given because we want it to have a governing influence from first to last in the care of potatoes meant for food—is that the crop, when taken out of the ground, should not stand uncovered and exposed to the light longer than is necessary for drying the tubers. Put the crop away promptly, and do the taking up on a fine day.

It helps, rather than hurts, to expose to the light and make green potatoes to be used as "seed;" all green potatoes are, we urge again, poisonous, and where this fact is not known to the cook there is always danger in eating mashed potatoes. The cook who knows this will, of course, watch for and discard all such.

REV. EDGAR D. JONES.

Revs. Edgar D. Jones, of Erlanger, and Edgar Riley of Bullittsville, are engaged in a very interesting protracted meeting at South Fork Christian church. Rev. Jones is receiving subscriptions for the erection of a $5,000 Christian church edifice at Erlanger, and besides the donation of a $400 lot on which to erect the building, he has secured subscriptions to the amount of $3,000 and he anticipates no trouble in raising the remainder of the desired amount. Mr. Jones is very popular not only with the members of his church, but is liked by all with whom he becomes acquainted.

COL. BERRY is pushing the Milton and Covington Traction road with all his energy, and if work on the road does not begin at an early day it will be no fault of his. He has succeeded in getting eastern capitalists interested and is going over the proposed route with them this week, and so far as they have inspected the capitalists regard the scheme very favorable. The right of way has been secured nearly the entire distance, and everything is now looking decidedly favorable for the construction of the road, which will be of untold value to the country traversed.

THE Republican nominee in this Appellate Court District is an ex-Democrat, and W. M. Beckner, of Winchester, another ex-Democrat, could scarcely prevent the Republicans from nominating him for Congress in his district. Verily, that class is in demand for offices in the g. o. p.

THE purchase of the Cincinnati base ball team by local capitalists created a great deal of red fire enthusiasm. The porkipolitans now own their local ball aggregation.

MRS. L. S. ADAMS.
Of Galveston, Texas.

"Wine of Cardui is indeed a blessing to tired women. Having suffered for seven years with weakness and bearing-down pains, and having tried several doctors and different remedies with no success, your Wine of Cardui was the only thing which helped me, and eventually cured me. It seemed to build up the weak parts, strengthen the system and correct irregularities."

By "tired women" Mrs. Adams means nervous women who have disordered menses, falling of the womb, ovarian troubles or any of these ailments that women have. You can cure yourself at home with this great women's remedy, Wine of Cardui. Wine of Cardui has cured thousands of cases which doctors have failed to benefit. Why not begin to get well today? All druggists have $1.00 bottles. For any stomach, liver or bowel disorder Thedford's Black-Draught should be used.

A youug man from Lick creek valley came to town a few evenings since under a full head of steam and uncorked his storage battery of musical knowledge and spent a couple of hours explaining to the crowd the great difference between A and B flat on a major minor sharp made in a piece of music. When the professor left town I had become enthused with the idea of music. I commenced and learned the girl I left behind me in the key of B flat, and then changed and whistled it in the key of major minor sharp, and to my surprise found the music had changed to the girl that left me behind.

The Board of Trustees of the proposed Confederate home met in Louisville last Wednesday. Thirty-five sites were offered and thirty rejected. D. M. Hewitt had a $100 break down with his threshing machine one day last week. He was pulling out from Ed Berkshire's when the main shaft of his engine broke and the whole outfit started down hill at a rapid gait, and if engineer John Baldon had not stood to his post and guided the engine and kept it from going over a steep bank, the whole outfit would have been badly wrecked. Baldon took great chances but he saved a general smash up. The machine was hauled home and put away for the season.

THE BIG FAIR.

The big Boone County Fair will swing open its gates next Wednesday morning to the public, and the indications are that it will be a record breaker. The program is as follows:

First Day.—Dairy Cattle, Draft Horses, Sheep, Fruit, and Pantry and Dairy.

Second Day.—Beef Cattle, Saddle Horses, Hogs, Flowers, Paintings and Drawings. This is also Grange day, and Fat Man Riders' day.

Third Day.—Mules, Fancy Turnout, Harness Horses, Baby Show, Lady Riders, Embroidery, Quilts.

Fourth Day.—All Purpose Horses, Match Horses, Lady and Gentleman Rider, Consolation Prize, Grain, Vegetables and Poultry.

The premium on display of poultry will be $5 and $3, instead of $1 50 as advertised in catalogue.

The railroad will give half fare rates, and on Friday and Saturday a special train will leave Ludlow at 9 a. m.

Lieutenant Governor N. W. Utley will be the guest of the Association on Friday.

The Burlington ball team went to Erlanger, last Saturday afternoon and played the club at that place. When ready for the start the regular pitcher, Brady, had not put in his appearance, but, with many misgivings as to the result of Brady's absence, the players started for the field of carnage. When they reached Erlanger, and it became known that Brady was not present, the Erlanger team and its rooters almost wept over their disappointment, as they had their strongest line-up—one that could solve his curves and in shoots and out shoots without the least difficulty. The Erlanger team marched to the grounds with the game won (in their minds). Burlington went to the bats first, and McKim, the first man up didn't do a thing but line out a three bagger, and before the bombardment could be stopped five Burlington players had crossed the home plate and clinched the victory.

In the first inning Erlanger made two singles and a two bagger, and landed two runs. At this point rungetting was suspended until the fifth inning, when every man in the Burlington team, except one, chalked up a run. Erlanger came to the bats and added three tallies.

In the sixth inning Burlington's stick work was terific—five singles, one double and a home run, and 12 more talleys. Erlanger brought up the rear again this inning with one single, a three-bagger and two runs.

When Burlington went to the bats in the seventh inning she had 25 to Erlanger's 7 runs, and not desiring to display too much porcine attribute, there was a letup all along the line, and when the game closed the score read 28 to 17 in favor of Burlington, with no foot notes added concerning Erlanger's "best base ball line up."

The young man who is principally responsible for the great sorrow that prevailed in Erlanger fandom after the game, was Willie Hughes, who, until last Saturday, was without a record as a pitcher, but who proved an enigma to his opponents. Struck out, by Hughes, 11; by Shearer, 7. Hits made by Burlington, 22; by Erlanger, 19; Home runs, Burlington, 2; Elanger, 1.

Gordon caught a good game, and Jack Sandford was invincible at first base.

The same teams will play at Burlington next Saturday, and who knows that last Saturday's score will not be reversed.

Last Saturday afternoon 9 young Burlington ball tossers journeyed to Bellevue to do up a club at that place. They fought long and hard for a victory, but the best they could do was a score of 20 to 2 in favor of their opponents.

At the solicitation of his numerous friends here, Rev. C. C. Conner will preach in the Universalist church in Burlington next Sunday at 3 o'clock p. m.

RUGBY SCHOOL

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS,

COVINGTON, KY.

Primary, Intermediate and Academic Departments. Prepares for any College or University. Military Training for Boys. Physical Culture for Girls. Catalogues.

K. J. MORRIS, A. M., Principal.

The following is the paper read by T. Z. Roberts in the recent Institute, which many of the teachers were anxious to see published.

I see by the facial expression of the teachers—by the compressed lip and flashing eye—that they are a determined company with an indeterminate power.

Here are some of the purposes of the determined teachers present this morning, if we can judge or conclude by their past words and future deeds: First, then, they are determined to do their best, which is all right, if that best is better than any one else can do.

They have a fixed purpose to teach the primary grades, to read accurately, to spell fluently and to gesticulate melodiously by the following methods: The sentence method, the word method, the combined method and the confounded method—with, the alphabet and without it, with script and with print, with pencil and chalk, with patience and pain and with any other adjunct or subjunct that may be useful in condensing three days work into ten minutes time.

In ye olden time Teachers thought that the three R's constituted, "first the Blade" in the process of education, but now we think best to teach—to the primary grades especially, civics and physiology before familiarizing them with that ancient and complicated literary production called the Alphabet, which is, you know, really logical, because a definite and masterful knowledge of Civil Government tends to develop civilians and other kinds of villians, and has a broad educational tendency, in teaching mathematics.

The Teachers have a fixed resolution to teach arithmetic in a modest way without egotism or profanity, especially percentage in which they will use the analytic method, the synthetic method, the expansive, the contracted, the fractional the Arithmetical, and the downright upright methods; all of which broaden the view and mystify the mind, and they will teach ratio in a ratio-nal manner, of course. That is to be expected.

It is firmly believed by the Teachers that as soon as the primary class has completed the course in Civics, physiology, physiognomy, psychology, biology and anthropology, it should take up the study of spelling and reading, but in this they are willing to defer to the wishes of the patrons.

In writing, the Teachers will allow a letter to slope in any direction except backwards, because the motto of Boone's Teachers is onward and upward.

Now concerning Grammar. I believe it to be the settled purpose of the Teachers of Boone county that even if the idiomatic construction of language depends on Technical Grammar, or if the construction of Technical Grammar depends on idiomatic language, or if the idiotic construction of Grammar depends on technical language, they intend to teach it thoroughly, if they are compelled to learn the latin, the Aryan, Teutonic, or the Russian languages in order to explain it, and they are right, too, for every patron of the school believes that each pupil should be a finished grammarian on leaving school, especially if that pupil be his child. Therefore each Teacher is of unchangeable purpose to drill the pupils in Technical work, Analyzing, Diagramming and Parsing, and to do this thoroughly in the fifteen minutes allowed by the State Program, even if they have classes of 15 or 20 or more. What a noble spirit! What an admirable purpose! never mind the results, the sentiment is there.

Fellow Teachers, I have admired the friendly spirit manifestad from each to each in your efforts to assist in making this Institute interesting in your discussions and in those social amenities, which have enlivened and illuminated the week just past, and I am glad that you have decided to carry back to your work that same friendly spirit, that you will have a smile for the patrons, a frown for the Superintendent and a switch for the pupils.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and, therefore, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucus surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Photographer C. C. Harlan, of Eaton O., can do so now, though for years he couldn't because he suffered untold agony from the worst form of indigestion. All physicians and medicines failed to help him till he tried Electric Bitters, which worked such wonders for him that he declares they are a godsend to sufferers from dyspepsia and stomach troubles. Unrivaled for diseases of the Stomach, Liver and Kidneys, they build up and give new life to the whole system. Try them, Only 50c. Guaranteed by W. F. McKim's, Burlington; Union Drug Store Union; J. A SIGNAL VICTORY.

The Revolutionists Capture and Hold Porto Cabello.

Washington, Aug. 15.—Just before the department closed a dispatch was received from Commander Nickols, of the Topeka, at Porto Cabello, stating that the revolutionists were in control and that there was no danger of an attempt to retake the town by the government forces. Commander Nickols acknowledged the receipt of instructions directing him to land a force in case of necessity, but stated that the necessity for such a step had not arisen.

In official circles the control of Porto Cabello by the revolutionists is considered a signal victory for that party, as it is a place of considerable strategic importance. It is a town of about 10,000 people, situated on a spacious, deep and safe harbor of which, if necessary, troops and supplies may be landed or dispatched to other places in the country. Porto Cabello is but a short sail from La Guaira, which is not far from the Venezuelan capital. A crisis in affairs at Porto Cabello, where the insurgents have been gathering strength, has existed for some time and Thursday's news from Commander Nickols confirms the prediction that a battle would soon be fought there. The Topeka is looking after the interests of Americans in that section of the country and Commander Nickols was given full authority to land a force if necessary, and also to prevent a bombardment without due notice. This action was authorized at the suggestion of Minister Bowen and closely followed a notice from the Germans that they intended taking similar steps for the protection of German interests.

The place called Angustora mentioned in Commander Rodgers' dispatch from Port of Spain as in the hands of the revolutionists is about 250 miles up the Orinoco river, and the more modern name for it is Ciudad Bolivar. Gen. Matos, who is practically at the head of the revolution against Castro took this town some time ago, and left one of his lieutenants in charge. According to information now in possession of the officials here, Castro is being hemmed in from three sides at Caracas. Gen. Matos advanced from Bolivar to the northwest to a place called Orituco, about 40 miles south of Caracas. Ten days ago Castro was reported as having left the capital with a force to meet the revolutionary general, but subsequently he changed his mind and returned. More recent advices indicated that a battle was imminent on the plains south of Caracas.

Early this week the revolutionists took Barcelona, to the eastward of Caracas, and now, according to this last dispatch from Commander Nickols, they have obtained control of Porto Cabello to the westward.

NEGRO EXPOSITION.

One Being Conducted Entirely By Colored People in Chicago.

Chicago, Aug. 15.—For the first time in history an exposition conducted entirely by Negroes was opened at the First regiment armory Thursday night and will continue 30 days. Actual business is transacted by Negroes at each of these places, mails, telegrams and express packages being delivered to officials and exhibitors of the show. An attendance of 5,000 greeted the inauguration of the exposition. All the profits of the enterprise will go to the endowment fund of the home for aged and infirm colored people, located in Chicago.

The boys were Robert and John Scott, sons of prominent people of this city, and it is alleged that they have committed a large number of burglaries during the past summer. Judge Bailey gave them the option of a reform school sentence or a cowhiding, and they chose the latter. The sentence of the court was then carried out, a janitor wielding the rawhide. The father of the boys was once mayor of Superior.

AUTO STRIKES A TREE.

Charles Fair and Wife Instantly Killed in France.

The Chauffeur, Who Was Sitting Behind the Fairs, Was Precipitated Into the Ditch and Became Insane From the Shock.

Evreux, France, Aug. 15.—Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fair, Americans, who were related to Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, jr. (Miss Virginia Fair), were returning to Paris from Trouville Thursday when their automobile swerved and crashed into a tree, 15 miles from here. Both were killed. The chauffeur became insane as a consequence of the shock.

The accident occurred at 2:30 Thursday afternoon almost in front of the Chateau Buissaon du Mai. The Fairs intended to dine and spend the night in Paris and return to Trouville for lunch Friday.

The wife of the gatekeeper of the chateau was the only witness of the disaster. She says she noticed a big red automobile coming along the road at a tremendous pace. Suddenly something happened and the heavy machine slid sideways from the right to the left side of the road, for about 60 yards. It then dashed up an embankment, turned a complete somersault and crashed into a big elm tree in front of the gate of the chateau. The automobile was completely wrecked, the front axle was broken, and other parts of the machine were smashed, including the steering gear. When the automobile turned over, the wife of the gatekeeper says she saw Mr. and Mrs. Fair thrown high in the air and fell with a heavy thud on the ground. The chauffeur, who was sitting behind the Fairs, was precipitated into a ditch. He staggered to his feet, calling for help. The gatekeeper's wife rushed to his assistance and aided him in extricating Mr. and Mrs. Fair, who were buried beneath the wrecked machine and in the last throes of death. Both had sustained ghastly injuries.

The accident was evidently due to the bursting of a tire. At the time it occurred the automobile, which was capable of running 74 miles an hour, was going at the rate of 62 miles an hour.

San Francisco, Aug. 15.—Charles Fair and his wife left San Francisco for Europe on May 30 last to stay two or three months.

Charles Fair was third of the four children of the late Mr. and Mrs. James Fair. Teresa, who is now the wife of Herman Oelrichs, is the eldest. Then comes James, who died about ten years ago. Charles was the third, and the youngest was Virginia, who is now the wife of W. K. Vanderbilt, jr.

Paris, Aug. 16.—The fatal accident to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fair is the sensation of the city and the leading topic of conversation among American residents and in automobile circles.

The manager of the firm which sold Mr. Fair the automobile in which he met death declared in an interview that he had more than once warned Mr. Fair that he was too imprudent. He said Mr. Fair had the speed madness, and had met with an accident the last part of June, when he collided with another automobile on the Champs Elysees, but luckily no one was killed.

"I attribute the accident," said the manager of the firm, "to the condition of the road where the disaster happened. At Evereux there is a steep and treacherous incline down which Mr. Fair must have gone at full speed and his automobile, which was capable of running at about 68 miles on the flat, would then have attained a speed of from 87 to 93 miles an hour."

Mr. Ellis, manager of the Hotel Ritz, who was at the Chateau Buisson du Mai in accordance with cabled instructions from Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, Mr. Fair's sister, to arrange for the removal of the bodies and Mr. and Mrs. Fair's belonging to New York, says he saw Dr. Perriquet, who was summoned after the accident from the neighboring town of Pacy Sur Eure. Dr. Perriquet told Mr. Ellis that when he reached the scene of the disaster both Mr. and Mrs. Fair were dead. They had apparently been killed outright.

Mr. Ellis found the bodies covered with beautiful flowers which M. Borsen, the owner of the chateau, had gathered from his garden. Mr. Ellis had the bodies embalmed and placed in the oaken caskets lined with lead. They were enveloped in silken shrouds. A special car was engaged to bring the remains by rail to Paris. They will be dispatched to New York by the first steamer.

New York, Aug. 16.—Mrs. Anna E. Nelson, mother of the late Mrs. Charles Fair, accompanied by her son, A. C. Nelson, a half-brother of the late Mrs. Fair, will leave their home at Newmarket, N. J., on Sunday for San Francisco, where they will employ lawyers to represent them in the distribution of the Fair estate.

THE PRINTERS MEET.

They Are Opposed to Socialism and Political Idealism.

Public Ownership of Public Utilities—Single Tax and So-Called "Government By Injunction" Opposed—Labels on Everything.

Cincinnati, Aug. 16.—The International Typographical union, which has been in session here all week, has disposed of over 300 propositions for changes in its laws as well as many resolutions. Among the resolutions defeated were those relating to socialism and political idealisms. A hard fight was made to have a committee of nine appointed to report at the next convention on the relations of wages to transion. It was finally advocated by the single tax men, but overwhelmingly defeated.

The spirit of the convention was most emphatically shown in the adoption of a resolution against socialism. Max Hayes, of Cleveland, had been elected as a delegate of the International Typographical union to the next convention of the American Federation of Labor, and delegates claim that they did not know he was a socialist until after he was elected and for this reason a strong resolution of instructions was adopted.

The agitation over the organization of the International Ladies' Auxiliary has been going on all week. It was settled Friday by the adoption of a resolution of endorsement by a large majority.

The Los Angeles union presented at length the case against a non-union paper of that city and the convention unanimously supported it.

It was decided after the referendum vote should be taken to make an international test case out of the Los Angeles controversy and in the event of a majority vote of the referendum the international union promises to raise about $25,000 per year for the fight at Los Angeles.

The only tie vote in the convention was on a resolution for trade autonomy and President Lynch promptly cast it in the affirmative.

At the afternoon session a resolution was adopted that all delegates to this convention be constituted a committee to work for a full referendum vote in support of the Los Angeles union in boycotting a paper in that city.

Resolutions were adopted for the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people; for public ownership of public utilities and the abolishment of all exploitations; for trade autonomy; for union labels on everything; for union made books; putting a ban on Cincinnati and Boston beer; asking congress to appropriate $6,000 for a statue of Amos J. Cummings at Washington; against single tax and against so-called "government by injunction." In the last-named resolution special reference was made to the findings of Judges Kohlsaat and Baker last year and of Jackson and Keller this year.

A strong resolution was adopted pledging support for a liberal display of the printing art at the St. Louis exposition and favoring that city as the place for the convention in 1904.

Several Havana Papers Accuse Him of Incompetency and Ignorance.

Havana, Aug. 16.—During the last few days several Havana newspapers have been making violent onslaughts upon the chief executive of the republic, accusing him of incompetency, ignorance and weakness in not having as yet done anything useful for the country. The paper says that in spite of the repeated requests of congress President Palma has not yet presented the budget.

THE TARIFF TREATY.

Convention Between the United States and China Signed.

The Rates on Imports Entering China Are Reported to Be 12 1-2 Per Cent. and the Export Duties 7 1-2 Per Cent.

Washington, Aug. 18.—The state department has received a dispatch from T. S. Sharretts, the treasury expert, who was commissioned by the state department to negotiate a tariff treaty between the United States and China stating that the treaty was signed on the 15th inst., and that he would sail for the United States on the first steamer.

The announcement contained in Mr. Sharrett's brief dispatch to the state department brings to a successful conclusion negotiations which have been in progress for many months for a tariff treaty between China and this country. It was stipulated as one of the features of the peace agreement between China and the foreign powers, at the close of the Boxer outbreak, that an entirely new fabric to trade treaties should be made. This carried out the purpose Secretary Hay had maintained throughout the preceding negotiations for an "open door," the desire being to open up foreign communications with the interior of China and thus gain access to the vast markets of the empire. Following the conclusion of the peace arrangements Mr. Sharrett was selected to carry on the tariff negotiations in behalf of the United States. This selection was due to his long familiarity with tariff affairs as he had assisted in the framing of recent tariff legislation before congress and had also served as one of the general appraisers of New York. He went to China about a year ago and has since been engaged in working out the details of a tariff agreement. It was announced about a month ago that the British commissioners had concluded a tariff treaty with China and it was understood at that time that the British treaty would serve as a basis for similar treaties with the United States and other foreign countries. The state department was advised at the time that the rates on imports entering China were 12½ per cent. and the export duties 7½ per cent. One of the most important provisions of the British-China treaty was that abolishing the likin tax. It is presumed that similar rates are made in the American treaty and that the likin tax is abolished as far as it relates to American goods in transit. The likin tax has been one of the most burdensome exactions of the antiquated Chinese system, as it was levied by the officials at various points through the interior without uniformity and often with less regard for commercial ends than for the enrichment of the unscrupulous local officials. The abolition of the likin tax will go far toward encouraging foreign trade and traffic in the interior of China.

Mr. Sharrett's dispatch is dated at Shanghai and does not go into details regarding the treaty he has signed.

THE MORO SITUATION.

It Is Regarded as Critical and the Tribe May Be Attacked.

Manila, Aug. 18.—The Moro situation in Mindanao is considered critical. It is believed that American troops will soon move against Bacoiod, where the recent murder of two men of the 27th infantry was plotted. A small party of Moros surprised an outpost of the 27th at Camp Vickars, Mindanao, August 12, and succeeded in killing two and wounding one American before they escaped. They were from Bacoiod, which has a strong fort and other defenses. Bitter opposition to the Americans exist at Bacoiod, and Capt. John J. Pershing, of the 15th cavalry, commanding the American forces at Lake Lanao, has recommended the reduction of the Bacoiod fort.

Gen. Chaffee, who left Manila August 12 on a final tour of the southern islands, reached Zamboanga, Island of Mindanao, last Friday. In a conference with the local commander Gen. Chaffee argued that unless the American forces moved decisively against the hostiles they would lose the support of the friendly Moros.

Cholera reports show few cases of the disease here, but a large number in some provinces. The total number of cases reported to date is 23,636, with 17,596 deaths. Estimating the cases which have not been reported to the authorities the total number is believed to have reached 30,000.

Father McKinnon believes such a training would impart to them the spirit of American priesthood and a beneficial knowledge of Americans and their language. He proposes to ask American bishops to assist this project financially.

There will be a banquet the evening of the governor's arrival.

RAILROAD WRECK.

One Man Killed and Another Probably Fatally Hurt.

Chicago, Aug. 18.—One man was killed outright and another was probably fatally injured in a railroad wreck at Hammond, Ind., early Sunday. A Chicago & Erie freight train standing on the tracks of the Chicago & Western Indiana railroad was crashed into by a special train of the Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville railroad bearing 600 excursionists from Cincinnati. The excursion train was running at a speed of 40 miles an hour when it crashed into the caboose of the freight train.

George W. Farris, 21 years of age, of Cave City, Ky., and employed by the Latrobe Steel Co., at Melrose, Ill., was instantly killed. His brother, Daniel E. Farris, aged 28 years, a telegraph operator employed by the Grand Trunk road at Millet, Mich., was probably fatally injured.

The Cincinnati excursionists were returning from a ten days' trip to Grand Haven, Mich., and Chicago. None of the passengers on the excursion train was seriously injured.

The Farris brothers were riding in the caboose of the freight train.

THE KING'S VISITORS.

Gens. Botha, DeWet and Delarey Call on His Majesty.

During the Voyage From South Africa DeWet Was Engaged Most of the Time in Writing His Book on the War.

London, Aug. 18.—The Boer Gens. Botha, DeWet and Delarey, who reached here Saturday from South Africa, left London at half-past 9 o'clock Sunday morning for Cowes, Isle of Wight, to see King Edward, on board the royal yacht Victoria and Albert.

The hour of the generals' departure from London was kept secret; consequently the streets were deserted when the three generals, accompanied by their secretaries, but by none of the ladies of the party, started for Cowes. They were stylishly attired in frock coats and silk hats.

Upon arriving at Southampton the Boer generals were welcomed on board the commander-in-chief's yacht, Wildfire, by Earl Roberts and Gen. Lord Kitchener. They immediately visited King Edward on board the Victoria and Albert and were then taken for a trip around the fleet in the Wildfire. They returned to London Sunday evening accompanied by Earl Roberts and Gen. Lord Kitchener, who took leave of the Boers at Waterloo station.

In an interview with a press representative Gen. Botha's secretary described the visit to his majesty. He said that when the Boer generals boarded the royal yacht King Edward came forward and, after they had been introduced, shook hands with each of them. The Boers were highly pleased with their reception. After a brief and informal talk of a non-political character with King Edward they were introduced to Queen Alexandra and Princess Victoria.

The reception by his majesty lasted a quarter of an hour. The king spoke of "the gallant and brave manner" in which the generals had fought through the long and arduous campaign, and of "the consideration and kindness" with which the generals treated British wounded. His majesty expressed his warm wishes for their futures. It was at the king's suggestion that the Boers took the trip around the fleet on board the Wildfire.

During the voyage from South Africa Gen. DeWet did not mix much with his fellow passengers. He was engaged most of the time in writing his book on the South African war. In common with his colleagues, snapshot photographs were constantly being taken of him and he was worried with requests for his autograph until he had to protest against the nuisance. Gen. Botha, on the contrary, was extremely genial and indulged in all the sports on shipboard. He was constantly in the smoking room, where he played cards. Gen. Delarey, besides playing draughts, took keen pleasure in discussions with British army officers on board the steamer.

The refusal of the Boer generals to witness the review of the fleet at Spithead or see King Edward Sunday caused great exultation in the continental press and undoubtedly upset the plans of Colonial Secretary Chamberlain. Mr. Chamberlain had appeared extremely anxious that the generals should see no newspaper representatives before their visit to King Edward and he accordingly caused instructions to be issued that no reporters be allowed on board the Wildfire or Nigeria, while very unusual restrictions were placed on all reporters.

The general impression is that Gen. Botha and his companions declined the invitation to witness the review and see King Edward because it came direct from Mr. Chamberlain; but, on receiving the king's personal invitation for Sunday, they readily accepted.

USED THE TROOPS.

An Outbreak at Shenandoah Quickly Quelled.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 16.—There was an outbreak Friday night right under the noses of the troops in camp and for a time it looked as though serious trouble would occur. The disorder was the result of a mob chasing an alleged unfair workman near the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Co.'s washery in the southeastern part of the town. There were 50 or 60 men in the mob. As they chased the man up the railroad throwing stones at him the night watchman of the washery, named Anthony Flynn, tried to rescue the man. The watchman was promptly thrown into the creek running parallel with the railroad by some of those leading in the chase. The crowd kept after the workman and he ran to the Reading railroad station, where a company of infantry was on provost duty. The company was immediately called into formation and attempted to hold the crowd back. The captain of the company exercised great patience with the crowd and prevented any serious trouble. The mob caused a large crowd to gather in all directions and word was immediately sent to camp for reinforcements. In nine minutes the entire 12th regiment and a battalion of the 8th were on the scene. The crowd quickly scattered and three men, John Howe, Frederick Zimmerman and Matthew Bronz, who are alleged to have been participants in the assault on the watchman and the workman, were arrested and taken to the town lockup. The troops were kept in the streets until a late hour Friday night. The affair created intense excitement in the town, but all is now quiet.

The three men who were arrested were later given a hearing and held in $500 bail each for trial.

The bail was promptly furnished and the men released.

HALF A MAN.

A New Guessing Game—How Much Does He Weigh?

They have a new game on Broadway. It is betting on the weight of half a man—that is, his trunk without the legs. What would seem to be an impossibility, but read further.

One day last week an old gambler was lounging in front of a Tenderloin cafe, probably wishing some one would invent a game that every one else was not "on to." Presently he observed a mendicant with both legs off close to the hips crawling along the sidewalk offering for sale pencils that would not make a mark. The torso of the mendicant was very large and powerful, he had a large head, and his arms were those of a giant. The gambler eyed the beggar in a speculative way for a moment or two as he hobbled down the street on his leather-clad stumps. Then he started after him.

At the corner the gambler beckoned him, and, stooping over him, talked rapidly for a few moments. A coin was passed to the cripple, and the gambler sauntered back to the cafe, in front of which was a gathering of choice spirits. In a few moments the mendicant came hobbling slowly along.

"Get on to that fellow," said the gambler. "How much do you suppose he weighs?"

The others looked at the approaching cripple and sized him up as they would a horse or anything else in which there was a possible bet.

"Oh! about 120 pounds, I guess," said one.

"Rats!" exclaimed another. "I'll bet he doesn't weigh more than 95 or 100 pounds." Nearly all made guesses, varing from ten to twenty pounds.

"Let's make a pool," said the discoverer of the mendicant. "Every fellow mark his guess and his name on a piece of paper and put it in a box and drop a five-dollar note in with it. Then we'll weigh the geezer, and whoever comes nearest to his weight takes the pot."

This looked like a good but not a sure thing for anyone, and so all agreed to go in. The man had now reached the group and offered his pencils.

"Say," said his discoverer, "do you want to make a dollar? If you do, wait a minute, and get weighed."

The mendicant agreed, and all retired to the restaurant, where the papers were prepared and put in a drawer, together with the money. Other men in the cafe, hearing of the pool, expressed a desire to get in, and were accommodated.

When the pool was closed, the mendicant was taken to an automatic weighing machine, and a nickel was dropped into the slot. The hand flew around and stopped at the 185-pound mark. Then there was a roar that the machine was out of order and that it did not register properly.

"What!" exclaimed the man who had guessed 115 pounds, "that remnant weigh 185 pounds! Nit. That machine isn't on the square, and ought to be ruled off."

To appease the crowd the mendicant was taken to another cafe and weighed, and the result was not three ounces different.

When the papers were opened there were only two men who had guessed within 50 pounds of the mendicant's correct weight. One was the gambler, who had first seen the mendicant. His guess was two pounds over. The other was a quiet young man, who had said nothing all through the controversy. He guessed four pounds under. The gambler took the pot and explained to the crowd that when he was a boy he lived in the country and used to guess at the weight of hogs at fairs, and the pot was his reward for experience. The others had guessed that a man of the mendicant's bulk must have weighed, with his full complement of limbs, about 250 pounds, more or less. On this they based their guesses, simply cutting their original estimate in half, because the subject was only half a man. They had forgotten that the lower half of a man—his two legs—do not weigh as much as the torso, in which are the vital organs and the bulk of the blood in the system.

After the crowd had dispersed the gambler went to the quiet young man whom he had beaten by only two pounds, and said:

"Were you on, too? Do you know, I came near putting down the weight you did, and then I thought perhaps some foxy guy might get next, so I made up my mind to get right close without guessing his weight exactly."

The young man looked at the gambler and then said: "So that is how you won, eh? Just give me my five back or I'll put your friends next.

I'm a doctor, and I guessed pretty nearly what the man's weight would have been complete. Then I figured the proportions in which his legs stood to his torso and deducted it from the total weight, and the result was my guess. I know something about anatomy. But my guess was on the square and based on knowledge, while yours was a skin game."

The gambler offered to divide the pot with the doctor, who refused it, insisting, however, on the return of what he had put into the pot. The gambler went to another cafe with his mendicant in tow.—N. Y. Herald.

CURIOUS THEORIES.

Regarding the World's Superior and Inferior Races.

That North America is one of the great powers is pretty widely known, but it has remained for Dr. Lehr, an influential member of the Alldeutscher Verbund, to state precisely why destiny has selected her as one of its favorites in this respect. The doctor is a pan-Germanist, and his ethnographic theories, which he has been expounding to scientists and government officials at Brussels, are decidedly novel.

According to him there are three great races in the world—the German, the Anglo-Saxon and the Slavic, and they have the exclusive right to fight or dispute among themselves for the supremacy of the globe. The first of these races comprises Germany, Austria, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway and the Flemish residents of Belgium; the second comprises England, the British colonies and North America, and the third embraces Russia in Europe and Asia, as well as the Czech and Slavic populations of Bohemia, Moravia, Illyria, the Balkans and the adjoining states. According to this theory anyone who is born a German, an Anglo-Saxon or a Slav inherits a certain definite chance in the lottery, the great prize in which is world supremacy. On the other hand, all those who have the misfortune to be born Spaniards, Italians, Frenchmen, Roumanians or South Americans are not only debarred forever from purchasing even the smallest ticket in this lottery, but are also destined to become eventually the subjects or bond slaves of the fortunate prize winners.

That a conflict between the three dominant races is inevitable and will soon take place Dr. Lehr is convinced. Not one of the three, he points out, has an exclusive right to rule the world, and in order that any one of them may acquire this right a conflict is necessary. For this reason, he continues, Germany and her dependencies—meaning thereby Flemish Belgium and the low countries—ought to prepare for a war first against England and then against Russia. Incidentally, too, he reminds the Belgians that the Boers are an integral part of the German race, and that the war in the Transvaal is an additional reason why the hands of Germany should be strengthened against England and why special efforts should be made to increase the German fleet.

Frenchmen are much amused at these theories, and one of them, M. Henri des Houx, says: "So we are worthless Latins, a rich booty for the world conquerors—nothing more? When will these German savans stop making fun of us with their paradoxes? If they are pan-Germanists, let them tell the Belgians and the Dutch that they want to annex them. If they are jealous of England, let them stop flirting and concluding secret treaties with her. If they desire to make war on Russia, as they talk of doing, they will soon find out whether France is a negligeable quantity and whether we are an inferior race."—N. Y. Herald.

Oddly Located Churches.

One of the best-known instances in the United Kingdom of churches with streets through them is that of St. John the Baptist's church in Bristol. Here we have the church situated right over the ancient gateway into the city on the Avon, and the towering spire standing high above the neighboring houses and streets is a remarkable sight, as one surveys it from the roadway below. The Church of St. John the Baptist in Bristol is a very old one. It occupies the whole width of the Somansecity wall and what was part of the old fosse or ditch. On each side of the central arch that cuts through the tower of the church is a smaller opening for pedestrian traffic, and these were made so late as the present century. Before they existed the sides of the gateway were part of the church, too. One of the most interesting, as well as most curious, cases of a roadway through a church is that of the Bell Tower at Evesham.

Eddie, honesty and truthfulness is the best policy. Changing your voice and saying, "no, I don't know you," in answer to our question, "are you going up the road?" did not conceal your identity. There was nothing of which to be ashamed. The lady is good enough and so handsome that no young man need be ashamed, and the hour was late enough that anyone would know that she had not given you the cold shoulder, and, at the same time, early enough for anyone to know that you had not kept her up too late, when she has to hustle out and assist her mother get an early breakfast.

LUDLOW.—An armistice has been declared by the Honorable City Counell and the flag of truce will wave over the town hall for a period of two weeks. The chief of police has been ordered by the good and honorable council to cease collecting licenses for two weeks, therefore, all ye farmers who are heavy laden with vegetables come unto us and we will do the rest. Councilman Ritchey, who claims to be the father of the license ordinance, made a motion at last meeting of council that a twice-a-week market be established in the town. Councilman Venr was on his feet in a second, and wanted to know who would come to the market, as Mr. Ritchey's ordinance had driven all the farmers and gardeners away from the town. Mr. Ritchey collapsed and had nothing more to say during the meeting. Senator Fleming being present was called on to give his views on the license question. He began by asking the members of council if they had been reading the Boone County Recorder lately, if not he said he would advise them to secure some of the recent issues and read them, that it would give them a good idea as to what the people think of the license ordinance. He said that he is opposed to the license ordinance, and that he paid more for street improvements than any citizen in person in town, that he invited the farmers and all others to come and wear out the streets in front of his property, and he would rebuild them and consider it a good investment. He said, "for every dollar you collect from a vehicle license you injure the city ten dollars." He said, "it is nothing more nor less than blood money, and every fair-minded councilman who desires to uphold the honor and welfare of the city would scorn to handle money thus obtained." He also stated that a fund had been raised by the business men to fight the ordinance, and that connell would better look out for a suit for damages.

The chief of police informed council that he would make no more arrests without an indemnifying bond from the city, that he never thought the ordinance would stand the test. Odell then ordered him to collect no more licenses until after the next meeting.

The morning following the meeting, messengers were sent out on bicycles to notify the farmers that they can now come to town free of charge, and quite a number came in last Saturday, and the doctors expect to be quite busy for several days prescribing for cases of indigestion.

A Modern Fable.

LUDLOW, KY., Aug. 19, 1902.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Once upon a time there dwelt together in peace two animals. One was called the "Councilman," and the other the "Farmer." These two animals subsisted on a food called "money." This food was found floating upon still water. The "Farmer" being a very good swimmer, could easily get its food. The "Councilman" could not swim at all, so had to depend on its companion, the "Farmer" for meals. Every morning and evening, the "Farmer" would swim out and get food enough for both. This went on for some time, until finally, the "Councilman" being much larger than the "Farmer," conceived a great scheme. So he told his companion that he must bring more "money." When the "Farmer" brought the food next morning as usual, the "Councilman" pounced upon him, and took nearly all the food. The "Farmer", a peaceful animal did not fight, but gave up his food. Every morning the "Councilman" took more "money" for himself. Finally the "Farmer" got tired of this and ran away. The "Councilman" being unable to get his food without the "Farmer" aid, took sick and died. The "Farmer" still lived, but a sadder and wiser animal.

THE PEACE OF GOD.

It May and Should Abide in the Hearts of the Children of God.

Care and Worry Are Contrary to the Will or Purpose of God for Them —Sermon by the "Highway and Byway" Preacher.

[Copyright, by A. N. Kellogg Newspaper Co.]
Chicago, Aug. 24, 1902.

Text: Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.—Phil. 4:6, 7.

A Wonderful Message.—What a picture God's Word gives to us in these verses of the life which walks in the full privilege of a child of God! No care or worry, constant communion with the Father, the abiding joy of a thankful heart, the indwelling peace of God keeping the heart and mind through the overshadowing presence of Christ; these are the enriching treasures which are set before us. Let the fullness of meaning which are in these words take hold of your heart, and life will be transfigured into new beauty and meaning for you. You will find yourself suddenly translated to a new world, where the sun shines brighter, the birds sing sweeter, the flowers are tinted with rarer beauty and exhale a more exquisite perfume; where new graces appear in the loved ones of the home and in the friends whom you esteem and cherish; where in every cloud which darkens the vision and obscures the way can be seen the smiling face of the Saviour, and where in every adverse wind which shrieks across your path you can feel the tender, strong touch of the Master and hear Him say, as He quiets the rising fear in the heart: "Peace, be still."

The little street waif, hungry, dirty and cold, with the memory of the barren walls, the squalor and cheerlessness of the place he called home burned into his heart during the few cruel years of his life, who was taken into the luxurious home of the rich and Christly woman, and sheltered, and warmed and fed, and who, with awe-subdued voice, finally managed to stammeringly ask: "Is—is this Heaven?" was not more deeply touched by the comfort and refreshment he received than is the soul which drinks the full meaning of the words of our text. As they unfold upon his vision and he feels the unspeakable peace of God in the heart he will catch himself exclaiming: "Is—is this Heaven?" And it will be a bit of Heaven let down into the life here and will lead back over a pathway of light and joy to the Father's house where in fullness is spread that which has been enjoyed as a foretaste here.

The Peace of God.—Our text tells us that it "passeth all understanding," that it "keeps the heart and mind through Jesus Christ" and that the way in which the soul comes into possession of this wonderful peace of God is by casting every care upon Him and having constant communion and fellowship with Him. So it not only tells of the wonderful privilege of the Christian, but points out the way by which to become possessed of that privilege.

The peace of God. It fathoms the deepest depths of human misery and despair, it scales the highest arches of Heaven and fills all the spaces of the dwelling place of God. It reaches from the rivers unto the ends of the earth, touching here and there a life and making it glorify its Author and Giver. It is all this and more, for it "passeth all understanding." Finite men cannot measure it. The infinite, omniscient, all-loving God alone can compass it and fathom its meaning. We talk of peace. What meaning does the word convey.

The artist, seeking to portray peace upon the canvas, marked out with the brush and paints the great grim cannon, and just within its dark, yawning, death-dealing mouth he placed the birdlings in the nest, while on the rim the parent bird poised its graceful body and with swelling throat and uplifted head it poured out its soul in sweet song. He succeeded in illustrating the thought of security and rest amidst frowning and ominous surroundings, but he did not tell all the fullness of meaning in the word peace.

The babe, nestling on the mother's breast, is nourished and cared for with never a thought on its part of how or from where, and experiences that peace moment by moment and day by day which permits it to grow and develop. Here is an added thought of what peace means in the heart.

The little one, out with its father on the dark and stormy night, was asked if she was not afraid. With surprise kindling in her great blue eyes, she looked up and said: "How could I, when I had hold of papa's hand?" Such sense of perfect protection and sheltering care from every gust of wind, from every thunderclap and lightning flash, that nothing but peace could reign in the heart while she had hold of papa's hand. Perfect trust here, putting away every care and worry, while she had hold of papa's hand. Here is another element which goes to make up the thought conveyed by the word peace. But the peace of God cannot be fully defined. It can be blessedly experienced and sheds a glad light all down the rugged pathway of life, but to define it and tell what it is beyond the power of human tongue.

"Peace! peace! Wonderful peace.
Coming down from the Father above;
Sweep over my spirit forever, I pray,
In fathomless billows of love."

How to Obtain It.—And our text, as we have said, makes plain the way to obtain this peace of God as a priceless possession of the soul. The first step is taken when we cast all our care upon Him who careth for us. Not like the poor weary woman did who carried her burdens into the presence of the Lord and after sorrowing over them there in agonizing prayer she gathered them all up again and went forth more heavily burdened than ever. That is not the way God wants you to do. That is not casting all your care upon Him. Do as the dear brother I knew did. He took his crushing burden to the Lord and, as he laid it at the Master's feet, he began to count over his blessings and burst into singing over the gift of a Saviour who had cleansed him from all sin. And when he went out from the presence of the Lord he forgot all about his burden and left it behind, while the dove of God's peace sang a new song in his heart such as it had not known for many a day.

Freedom from care and worry, because we cast it all upon the Lord. Think of it! Why it is said that care and worry kill more people in the world to-day than disease or calamity. We find it written upon the brow of the multitudes of people we meet daily. The father carrying burdens in his business that are fast tinging his hair with gray, and shortening his days upon earth; the mother bravely struggling under the cares and responsibilities of the home, and day by day feeling her failing strength unequal to the increasing demands upon it; the conscientious pastor, the faithful Sunday school-teacher, the consecrated missionary, the earnest Christian worker in whatever field his efforts may be centered, find the discouragements of their work pressing heavily upon them and care and worry setting its mark upon their faces and weakening the power of their service. I read not long ago of a dear servant of the Lord working in the dark places of one of our large cities upon whom the depressions of her work rested so heavily that the resultant care and worry unbalanced her mind and she took her own life. Oh, if the joy and gladness of the message of our text had gotten hold upon her heart she would have ceased to carry burdens which Christ alone can bear, and the bright sunshine of the peace of God within her soul would have continued to shine out in the dark places where she had been called to labor.

The Christian who lives within the sphere of the thought of this text is alive to his own needs and duties as well as to the needs and burdens of those about him, but he does not try to carry them alone, but passes them along to the great Burden Bearer who wears the heaviest end of the yoke and bears the largest part of the burden of the load. Just as my little girl helped me carry the heavy bundle. Her chubby hand grasped one end of the package, and we walked along happily together, I carrying the load, while she rejoiced in the thought that she was helping papa. Christians are trying to carry burdens God never intended them to struggle under, and a gloom is being cast over their lives which is undermining their faith and wrecking their usefulness and happiness. Elijah carried the burden of the sins of the children of Israel so upon his own heart as to be unable to see a single one of the 7,000 in Israel who had not bowed the knee to Baal. We see him fleeing before the wrath of the wicked Jezebel and, broken in spirit, throwing himself down under the juniper tree in the wilderness, he pleads with God to let him die. He has struggled along with the burden of his work, trying to carry it all alone; and now, after the glorious triumph over the prophets of Baal, all seems to be lost, and his efforts in vain. Did you ever feel that way, dear Christian? Well, God was patient with Elijah, as He is with you and me when He sees us trying to carry burdens which He alone can bear. And He gave Elijah nourishment and strength until he could get into the seclusion of the mountain fastnesses of Horeb, and there God asks, as He asks you and me sometimes: "What doest thou here, Elijah?"

What doest thou here with that burden upon your heart and that discouragement sapping your strength? Elijah's place was back there with the 7,000, to encourage them and rally them to battle against the forces of evil in their midst. He has been so busy carrying the burden of that whole people that he has failed to see them, and had run off to the wilderness in his discouragement. Is not that the way you do, sometimes, my brother, my sister? Carry burdens which God wants to carry for you, and then because you think you are doing it all and that there are none standing with you, you flee to the desert of discouragement and feel as though you wanted to die. Quit that sort of thing. Cast all your care upon Christ, so that you will be free and light-hearted to fight for Him. This is the first step to having the peace of God in the heart.

Communion and Fellowship. And the second step is taken when we "in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." In response to God's query: "What doest thou here, Elijah?" Elijah begins to unburden himself to his Lord.

My little girls came running home from school one day some months ago, and, rushing breathlessly into the presence of their mamma, they threw themselves into her arms and burst into tears. Their little hearts were heavy with the burden of a terrible experience. It was some time before the convulsive sobbing would give the little tongues a chance to tell the story of their grief. At last, after the many broken bits of sentences and words were all out and mamma knew the whole story of their terrible fright and how Frances had almost been run over by a swift-speeding horse and his hoof had cruelly bruised the little foot, the sobbing ceased and the sunshine of the smiles began to break through the tear-dimmed eyes, for mamma knew all about it, and the burdened little hearts felt lighter and were comforted in the love of her sympathy. Where a moment before had been convulsive sorrow and a weight pressing upon them hard for their tender feelings to bear, now was the cheery smile and happy laugh. Peace once more reigned within. Why? Because they had told mamma all about it, and when she knew, it was all right. Oh, that the little ones could teach us "children of a larger growth" this secret of finding and knowing the peace of God. Tell Him everything. Tell Him all about yourself and your experiences, and you will find the burdens like a thick cloud, rolling off your crushed and weary heart, and the sunshine of His love will pour in upon you, bringing that peace which passeth all understanding.

"In everything . . . let your requests be made known unto God." We know this is God's Word. His loving invitation to us to share every thought, every desire, every aspiration with Him. We speak the words and yet we do not apply them to our lives. This is the reason we do not know the peace of God in the heart. How much fellowship is there between the husband and the wife, or between the intimate associates where experiences are not shared? where burdens and trials, joys and aspirations, are not told to one another? You know how it is. If you feel that you are withholding from your dearest friend a thought or experience or plan which should be shared with him you are ill at ease, and perhaps avoid his presence. Your peace of mind is destroyed. So in larger degree is it with your relations with your Heavenly Father. He is interested in every detail of your life. You must "in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, make your requests known unto Him," if you would be the recipient of the peace of God which passeth understanding.

It clarifies the vision to talk a plan or experience or thought over in audible words. You cannot successfully and fully think a prayer to God. It must be spoken in audible words within the ear, but closer if it is real prayer, real communion. Many a pet plan and scheme which we have cherished of in our minds will appear silly and ridiculous as we undertake to explain it in audible words to the Lord. Many a burden we suppose we are carrying will vanish like the mist of the morning before the advancing sun as we undertake to tell the Lord in spoken words about it. Many a proud boast and conceited notion in regard to our ability and achievements will fall like empty cockle shells when we endeavor to speak of them in the ear of the Lord. But we need to tell the Lord all these things if we would have His peace abiding within.

And the oil of gladness must anoint every prayer. Not because of what we are, but because of the Lord "Who loved us and gave Himself for us." Our text tells us not only to "in everything by prayer and supplication make your requests known unto God," but declares it must be "with thanksgiving." This element in our communion with God is too often lacking, and as a result our worship and service is robbed of its life and strength. We go into the presence of the Lord with our gloom and our burdens and, after we have rolled them over in His presence and talked about them, and measured and remeasured them and weighed and reweighed them, we leave our closets with deeper gloom and heavier burdens than ever before. Why is it? Because the essential element of praise and thanksgiving is lacking in our worship and communion. There is victory in the shout of praise, in the song of thanksgiving. It was the glad shout of confidence in God which crumbled the walls of Jericho. It is the spirited music of rejoicing which revives the flagging courage and spirit of the wavering army and spurs it on to glorious victory. We need more of praise and thanksgiving. Spend a half hour with David each morning in the Psalms, and the sun will rise with new power and beauty, and the lowering bank of fog of doubt and discouragement will vanish away.

The letter in which our text is found was written by Paul to the Philippians while he lay a close prisoner at Rome, and was face to face with death. It was perhaps one of the darkest periods of Paul's life, and yet see the message of rejoicing which he sends to the beloved church at Philippi. The sound of praise and thanksgiving burst from his prison cell and penetrated to the palace of the Caesars to the saving of precious souls, and brought back to his heart the sweet peace of the Lord's glorious presence. You may have it, too, if you will let the notes of thanksgiving ring out along the pathway of your prayer and supplication, and as you leave your closet you will rejoicingly sing:

"What a treasure I have in this wonderful peace,
Buried deep in the heart of my soul;
So secure that no power can mine it away,
While the years of eternity roll.

"Ah! soul, are you here without comfort or rest,
Marching down the rough pathway of time?
Make Jesus your friend ere the shadows grow dark;
Oh, accept this sweet peace so sublime."

THE TRUSTS' SHARE.

Republican Campaign Book Falsifies Facts Concerning the Capitalistic Combines.

Under this title the republican managers in their 1902 campaign book attempt to belittle the trust question. They say:

"The trusts have not occupied as great a place in the manufacturing industries as they have in public discussion. According to the returns of the census for 1900, the value of trust-made articles was only 12.8 per cent. of the total output of the manufacturing establishments in that year. The raise of the total output of all manufacturing establishments in the census year was $13,004,400,143, while the value of the output of the trusts was $1,667,350,941, or 12.8 per cent. of the whole. . . .

"The list contains 183 corporations. . . .

"The largest of these was the United States Steel corporation, with $1,005,331,740 capital stock and bonds."

None of these statements are true. Some are absolutely false, others are half or quarter truths. As usual, the latter are the meaner lies to deal with.

The campaign bookmaker is mistaken when he says the United States Steel corporation is included in the list. Census bulletin No. 122 distinctly states that the steel corporation was formed after the census year and was not included in the list of 183 trusts.

THE LAST STRAW.

He Cannot Carry the Trusts.

This writer must have had this census bulletin before him when he was copying figures and statements from it. The most conspicuous matter on page 2 relates to the great steel corporation and the reasons why the returns from it were not included in the trust tables. The writer evidently wanted to make as good a case as possible, and decided to deliberately falsify statements to make it easy for republican speakers and writers to deceive the people. Hence he stated that the steel trust, whose capital was one-third of all, was included in the list. Of course he expected republican speakers to tell the people that outside of this steel trust, the total output in trust combinations was only $2,000,000,000, and that the trust question was being greatly exaggerated by the wicked democrats. Hundreds of spellbinders will undoubtedly use his figures.

The campaign book treats this list of 183 trusts as if it were a complete list and embraced all the trusts in the country. It is far from complete. It does not, for example, include any of the scores of gas and electric light combinations, although the value of their products forms a large part of the $13,000,000,000 of total manufactures, the value of gas alone being $75,716,693.

How very incomplete this trust list is, is evident from the fact that as far back as 1899 the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin Year Book of New York contained a list of 415 trusts (including well-known price-fixing agreements and a few projected and chartered trusts), with a total capitalization, issued and estimated, of $7,418,235,342. Surely the writer had heard of these year book lists. Why did he ignore them, unless with intent to deceive? The list printed in the appendix of this year's (democratic) book contains 285 incorporated trusts with an issued capital of $6,743,488,851. It is prepared by Mr. John Moody, the greatest expert on industrial securities, etc., in this country.

Again, the census list contains none of the hundreds of unincorporated trusts, price-fixing agreements, associations, pools, etc., which census bulletin No. 122 tells us "are often more effective in regulating prices . . . than actual consolidations under a charter." One of these is the beef trust, which has a product valued at $500,000,000 or $600,000,000 out of the $786,000,000 which forms part of the $13,000,000,000; another is the Bessemer Ore association, with a product of nearly $100,000,000; another is the steel rail pool, with a product of $60,000,000; others of importance are the anthracite coal combine, the structural steel pool, the Steel Bar association, the Steel Plate association, and scores of other associations and pools in steel, hardware, chemicals, agricultural implements, etc.

Beyond a doubt, the prices on two-thirds of our manufactured products are fixed by trusts of some kind. The public is not mistaken when they give heed to this subject and insist upon discussing it seriously and often.

THE POWER OF INJUNCTION.

Possible Because Republican Congress Refused to Pass a Law That Would Prevent It.

At the last session of congress a bill was introduced under the title "to define conspiracies." It was drawn by an attorney for the American Federation of Labor, and was intended to prevent government by injunction. The democratic members of the judiciary committee were unanimous for the bill, but Mr. Littlefield, a republican, who is said to be selected by President Roosevelt to lead the fight against the trusts, was opposed to the bill, and made a long report against it. This indirectly shows that the president is not heartily in sympathy with the striking coal miners, or he would not select a lieutenant who opposed remedial legislation that was fraught with so great consequences to laboring men, and especially the striking miners. In spite of the opposition of Mr. Littlefield and others, the bill passed the house, but corporation influence was too powerful in the senate, and it was laid aside. The democrats of both houses were anxious to pass this bill, and it was a sorry day for the striking coal miners when their efforts were defeated by the republicans.

In telling of the injunction campaign now going on in West Virginia against the strikers' rights, the New York Journal says:

"One more crime has been added to the catalogue.

"Judge Jackson, by his injunctions, made it a punishable offense to ask a coal miner to join a labor union, and now Judge Keller, another West Virginia jurist, has issued injunctions forbidding the establishment of strike camps, which are established in connection with the purchase and distribution of food for the striking miners.

"The law-breaking railroads, which mine coal illegally and in defiance of their charters, are to be congratulated on the presence on the bench of two such conrenient justices as these.

"If they do not win the strike it will not be the fault of Judge Jackson and Judge Keller.

"The splendid response of the union conference in the matter of strike benefits made it impossible for theoretical operators to carry out their beneficent scheme of starving the miners into abandoning their union, so this injunction, directed at the leaders of the national executive committee and others charged with the duty of providing supplies for the men who are out on strike, comes along in the very nick of time.

"The encroachment on the liberty of the miners is greater with every example of this misuse of the power of the federal injunction." And then after describing the old penal laws of England that punished a man who refused to work at the prevailing rate, the Journal goes on to say:

"It was from this condition of slavery that labor unions rescued the men who do the world's work.

"The injunction principle would again bind the hands of labor and make it absolutely dependent on the generosity of employers.

"It is not for the law to say that men shall not join unions for their mutual benefit, or that they shall not form camps or do anything else that is not in itself unlawful, and when the law is turned and bent to make these things criminal, to the end that some man or set of men may hire workers cheaply, there is engendered a contempt for laws that may not always be confined to the judge-made rulings.

"The progress of labor has been over the wrecks of just such obstacles as these, and it is absurd to suppose that this progress can be halted now. The injunctions of Judge Jackson and Judge Keller will never become precedents. Whether they are sustained for the present or not, they will soon be overruled by the court of public opinion, against the decisions of which no injustice can stand in a free country." . . .

TARIFF MUST COME DOWN.

It Is the Mother of Trusts and the American People Will Not Submit to It.

"The tariff will not down.

"No matter how hard the republican leaders try to keep it down, the tariff continues to force its way to the top.

"The official republican campaign text book, by ignoring the tariff in effect, issues orders to the party's orators and editors to keep silent on the subject. Nevertheless there is an unmistakable demand among the republicans of the middle west for tariff legislation. The Iowa platform's declaration in favor of such remodeling of the schedules as shall deprive monopoly of protective shelter is a significant response to this demand. . . .

"The conviction is spreading that the tariff is the mother of trusts.

"It is the tariff that enables the industrial monopolies to perpetrate the swindle of selling goods cheaper to foreigners than to Americans.

"It is the tariff which shields the food trust from competition, and thus enables it to charge what it pleases for meat.

"It is the tariff which enables the shoddy trust to make counterfeit cloth, and so defraud the poor whenever they buy a "cheap" garment, carpet or blanket.

"Tariff revision must come.

"The American people will not submit to being permanently governed and robbed by the trusts."

BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

Once Called Goring House and Only by Chance Came to Be the Residence of Royalty.

Buckingham palace is to-day one of London's most comfortable mansions. Extensive alterations were carried out at the beginning of the year, and the private apartments were completely modernized. His majesty's suite of rooms is situated in the right wing, looking on to the gardens, which, as everyone knows, run up Constitution Hill, says the London Express. They are 40 acres in extent; a particular feature of them is the lake, covering no less than five acres. There are boats on it, and at royal garden parties they are manned by the royal watermen in their state liveries for the pleasure of any of the guests who may care for a row.

The gardens are beautifully laid ont, and are well wooded. The prospect from the king's apartments does not in the slightest suggest that the palace lies in the very heart of the metropolis, girt by a belt of brick and mortar from half a dozen to a dozen miles in breadth. It was only by chance that Buckingham palace ever became a royal residence. It occupies the site of the mulberry gardens laid out by James I. in his unsuccessful attempt to start a silk industry in London. Subsequently these gardens became a public pleasure ground — "a silly place with a wilderness somewhat pretty," according to Pepys—where the fashionable thing to do was to go and eat mulberry tarts.

The house was originally called Goring house; the name was next changed to Arlington house, and when, in 1703, John Sheffield, duke of Buckingham, bought it, it became Buckingham house. The duke of Buckingham demolished the old structure, and built in its place a mansion of red brick. When George III. was looking out for a more commodious house than St. James' palace, Buckingham house happened to be in the market, and he bought it for only £21,000. With the exception of George IV., all the children of George III. were born under its roof.

In 1775 the property was settled by act of parliament on Queen Charlotte, in exchange for Somerset house, and then became known as Queen's house. The old name of Buckingham house was revived when in 1825 the present building was begun by George IV., according to the designs of John Nash. William IV. never cared for it, and so did not live there. It was only in the last reign, when Queen Victoria took up her residence, that the mansion at last came to be styled Buckingham palace. Here in 1840 their first child, the princess royal — Empress Frederick—was born to Queen Victoria and the prince consort, and here also, in the following year, on November 9, was born their second child King Edward VII.

A Kingly Prerogative.

It is not generally known that King Edward since his accession to the throne has become the guardian of the children of the prince and princess of Wales, and of his other grandchildren, over whom he has complete control, the rights of their parents being superseded. This was decided to be law nearly 200 years ago, by a majority of 10 to 2 of the judges. The right was frequently used by the Georges, who had a habit of quarreling with their sons. Before members of the royal family can marry they will have to obtain King Edward's consent, or the marriage is void. George III. managed to secure this power by means of the royal marriage act, in consequence of his brothers marrying subjects, to his great annoyance.—London Tit Bits.

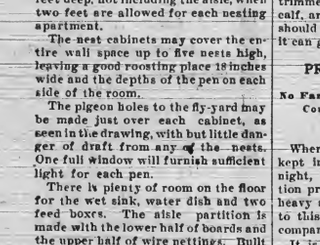
MODERN PIGEON LOFT.



Description of an Interior Arrangement Which Makes Care of the Birds Very Easy.

When pigeons are to be kept in large numbers, it is quite important that the loft be arranged conveniently in order that the work of caring for the birds may be done quickly yet with the least disturbance to the pigeons.

When it becomes necessary to have several pens, the best way is to arrange them in line, with a three-foot aisle or walk at the back.

The arrangement of the rooms in which from 25 to 35 pairs of pigeons may be kept, is set forth in the accompanying drawing, and is so simple to understand that little need be added by way of explanation.

The rooms of the pigeon house are partitioned off with single boards, being fastened to the floor and ceiling, thus avoiding frame work of any kind where the nest cabinets set.

Rooms may be made from 9 to 12 feet wide, the wider the better. They should not be over seven feet high but could be from six and a half to seven and a half. They may be from eight and a half to twelve and a half feet deep, not including the aisle, when two feet are allowed for each nesting apartment.

The nest cabinets may cover the entire wall space up to five nests high, leaving a good roosting place 18 inches wide and the depths of the pen on each side of the room.

The pigeon holes to the fly-yard may be made just over each cabinet, as seen in the drawing, with but little danger of draft from any of the nests. One full window will furnish sufficient light for each pen.

There is plenty of room on the floor for the wet sink, water dish and two feed boxes. The aisle partition is made with the lower half of boards and the upper half of wire nettings. Built in this way the attendant may pass by the pens as rapidly as he wishes, and not disturb the birds.

It is quite important that the birds those that swing either way would tendant is performing his daily work. In pens where one must pass through, it is necessary for one to go very slowly and quietly or the birds will rise and skip for the fly yards. The doors should be made to match the partitions and hung with spring hinges, those that swing either way would be best. By having the aisle one can use a push car or small wheelbarrow in cleaning out pens.—Farm Journal.

THE POULTRY BUSINESS.

Some Reasons Why None But a Many-Sided Man Can Make a Success of It.

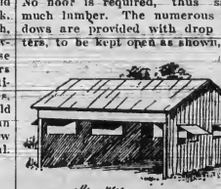
The successful poultryman must be many-sided. Poultry raising is a complicated business and requires a good deal of knowledge of a good many things. This knowledge is not acquired in a day. Poultry diseases must be known to a very considerable extent, and this requires thought and study. The knowledge of the diseases must be supplemented by the knowledge of the best conditions to prevent them. The poultryman must be familiar with the chemical constituents of feeds and understand the balancing of rations. He must be able to distinguish the different breeds and should know something of the standards of perfection. His knowledge of all the experiments with poultry should be complete. No poultry book of value should be outside of his library. To possess himself of the knowledge obtainable by reading he must devote a good deal of time to this branch of his activity. Then he must be familiar with the markets and with the methods of men that buy fowls and eggs. Moreover he must have a large stock of information as to how to run an incubator. This is a hard thing to procure, as it requires much loss of time and material finding out what things are necessary to be done to insure success. To these things must be added attention to innumerable details. Because the poultryman must be many-sided, many that attempt to be poultrymen fail. The man that goes into the poultry business should do so with his eyes open. He must expect to have to learn, and to learn one thing at a time.—Farmers' Review.

An Old Gander on Guard.

"Keep an old gander," says a writer in a gardening paper, "if you would protect young chicks from their enemies in the shape of dogs, cats, crows and magpies. The gentleman will be found of great use, shifting all objectionable characters with commendable promptness. Not only will intruders be smartly looked after, but the gander will make as much noise as possible while performing his duty, thus giving the poultry keeper and game rearer warning when all is not right."

RAISING BEEF CALVES.

The End of Six Months They Should Weigh 500 Pounds.



[illegible] calves. If [illegible] an April calf [illegible] beef stock," says a correspondent of the Indiana Farmer. "The mother should be well taken care of, fed on plenty of clover hay, ground corn and oats, mixed half and half. Let the calf have all the finest milk that it wants; then take it away from the cow and put it in a stable handy and where the cow can see it if it is bad weather. If the [illegible] put the cow on a [illegible] with the calf [illegible] there it [illegible] the cow. The calf [illegible] to the cow morning [illegible] for the first two weeks; then [illegible] that will eat if it is where it can get [illegible] something green. There should be a small lot of rye fenced off for the calf, and that, with plenty of milk morning and night, will be all that is required for the next two weeks. Then the calf will be one month old. On May 1 there should be a patch of oats ready for the calf, with a box nailed up under a shed where the calf can go out of bad weather and eat a quart of ground oats and corn, equal parts, morning and night for the next month. Feed just after turning the cow out. During the third month, June, the calf should be treated the same as the second, except a little more ground feed, say one-half pint more. The fourth month it should have a patch of peas to run in, and the feed should be cut down to one quart morning and night. The fifth month the calf should have three pints of ground oats and corn and one of oil cake or flax-seed meal given just after being turned to the cow, with the pasture increased by letting run on a fresh rye patch. At the end of August it will be six months old, and should be ready for market at the top price for calves. I should have said at the end of two weeks the calf should be trimmed and dehorned if a horned calf, and during all this time the calf should have fresh, clean water where it can go and drink at will."

PROTECT YOUR STOCK.

No Farm Should Be Without a Well-Constructed Pasture or Paddock Shed.

Where cattle or other animals are kept in a pasture both day and night, there should be some protection provided against rainstorms and heavy showers. A shed well adapted to this purpose is shown in the accompanying illustration.

It is low, and has one side open. This open side should face the quarter from which cold rains are least likely to come, the direction varying in different parts of the country. No floor is required, thus saving much lumber. The numerous windows are provided with drop shutters, to be kept open as shown, thus affording free entrance to air, but keeping out rain. If such a building were located near the other farm buildings, it would make an admirable winter shed for sheep, the windows being closed, or a winter storage place for farm machinery, the front being closed in with lapped boarding.

When such a building is located in the pasture, the cattle can be taught to come to it at night by giving an occasional feed of grain there. In this way they will have immediate shelter if a sudden shower occurs in the night. Moreover, much manure will thus be saved, which can be drawn away to the fields, spelled up, rotted and spread over the pasture land. The manure is dropped by cattle in the pasture, it is of but little benefit to the soil, as it is all in one spot, killing the grass, and rendering unpalatable to cattle the rank grass that grows about its edges for several years thereafter. Sheep enrich the land [illegible] feed upon, but the manure dropped by cattle in a pasture is very largely wasted.—Country Gentleman.

The Value of a Horse.

Prof. W[illegible] The German army horses can walk 4 miles an hour in a day, one-third of the distance being in a walk, trot and gallop respectively. This work means an expenditure of energy amounting to not less than 23,748,000 foot pounds, or a feed requirement of 14.77 pounds, of digestible matter, including the food of support. The horses are fed on an average a ration consisting of only 5.5 pounds of hay, 11 pounds of oats and some cut straw. This ration contains only about 8.8 pounds of digestible components, and "it is therefore not hard to understand why the horses lose heavily in weight during the maneuvers, and that, when these are over, a large number of animals have to be disposed of, as not adapted for use in the military service; they are also unfit for almost any other work."

Fowls do not run together in large numbers. They will always divide into flocks of small size and will select different feeding grounds, always provided they have the opportunity.

FEMININE FINERY.

New Dress Fabrics That Are Now in Favor with the Devotees of Fashion.

Some of the new poplins and mohairs are woven with a silk or satin stripe of slightly darker color, or they are figured at intervals with raised pin-head, polka, or coin dots in white, colors, or black. Shepherd-check mohairs are also among the fashionable utility fabrics of the season, says a fashion authority.

White lace Rubens hats dotted with very small pearl beads, and decorated here and there with fine black lace sprays and medallions in mingled thread and Chantilly patterns, are one of the latest Parisian French millinery. The hats are further trimmed with black and white aigrettes set into soft, fluffy lace pom-poms.

Among the new dress fabrics shown at the various importing houses are delicate weaves, called crepe Elysian, Voile, Bretange, crepe Eytinge, crepe Melange, soie Eolienne, silk warp, French sublime, mercerized grenadine, silk-dotted pongee, linen-striped zephyr crepe, albatross, mistral etamine, poplinette, and voile chiffon.

The jacket and skirt costume of pale blue pique or blue butchers' linen, trimmed with strappings of the same, piped with butter-colored batiste, the points held down with tiny gold buttons, forms a charming summer gown. The jacket with Eton fronts and a tiny postilion back is pretty for this, worn with a white tucked silk blouse vest and a narrow gold belt.

White India mull neckties, tucked in points at the ends and trimmed with medallions, and one deep frill of lace, are among the French novelties. A turn-down collar and narrow turn-back cuffs to match are added to many of these ties. Black and white batiste sets are likewise shown, and draped stocks and undersleeves, with fine real Valenciennes lace, gathered at the edges of both neck and wristbands, are among the dainty things worn by Parisians.

Very smart-looking dresses worn at recent fashionable gatherings, were of flowered silk, this forming the skirt, with white peau de cygne or white glace silk blouse waists and various other models, formed of embroidered batiste, tucked mull, elaborately decorated with Vegetian medallions, or of chiffon generously covered with Renaissance point or the fine Lierre laces which come in such new and attractive patterns. Some of the white chiffon waists are lined with soft pink chiffon, the white textile cut away beneath the lace bands or medallions, the pretty rose tint beneath them showing the beautiful designs to great advantage.

Batiste is used in combination with shepherd's check and foulard gowns for both waist and skirt trimmings, but this goes without saying, as almost every other model one sees has some sort of tucked batiste accessory in white, cream, tan, or butter color, with a finish of lace medallions, frills, waved ends, or straight-edged insertions.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

Items of Information Upon Matters Which Come Under the Head of Domestic Affairs.

Your old wicker or cane-seated chairs can be given a new lease of life and be made to look like new by staining them with the new prepared stains which stain and varnish at one application. These stains can be made effective even over old paint by applying two coats. Then make some cushions for seat and back and your chairs are new again, says the Detroit Free Press.

The bolster roll is still used upon beds, being, in fact, as popular as ever. New ones are made of heavy corrugated paper, such as is used for sending books and photographs through the mails. The roll is hollow, and has two openings on the side, so that the pillows can be put inside, out of the way. The bolster is covered first with bleached muslin, then with the material of the bedspread, whatever it may be.

Do not begin to use from a freshly-opened package of cereal food until you have examined it carefully. Sometimes a package remains a long time on the grocer's shelves and gets wormy or infested with weevils.

It saves work and time to sew the carpet-rags first and cut them afterward. Lay the ends of the pieces together so that they lap and sew three times across with the machine. You can tear until you come to the seam, cut through it, and tear again. Almost any shaped pieces can be sewed in this way, if you only take care to lap them the width of the rag you intend to cut. This insures a firm seam.

Pickled Cherries.

Select fine specimens of the large, sweet varieties, allow both the stems and stones to remain. Place in a stone jar and pour over them a scalding hot sweet, spiced pickle. Let this stand three days, drain off the liquor, reheat and pour again over the fruit; hot; repeat this three times, three days intervening between each time.—Albany Argus.

Bart Cream Sauce.

Put a quarter of a cup of granulated sugar in a saucepan and stir over the fire until a dark brown color; then pour in slowly a cup of thin, sweet cream and continue to stir until sauce is very hot; then serve with custard or butter pudding.—Washington Star.

Personal Practices of the Man Who Can Tell All About How to Succeed in Life.

"Ah, poor fellow!" said the magazine editor's visitor, drawing his chair up to the desk after a sad-looking, middle-aged man had shambled out, relates the Chicago Record-Herald. "I'm glad you gave him something. If I hadn't feared you might regard it as an impertinence, I would have given him a little change myself. What a poor, broken-down looking chap he was. What was his story? The same old thing, I suppose. Lost his job, can't get a chance anywhere else because he's more than 40. Family on his hands, too, very likely. By George, it's a tough proposition any way you look at it."

"I don't quite understand what you're referring to," said the editor.

"Why, that poor fellow who was in here just now. I saw you give him some money. It must come mighty hard for one with a vestige of manhood left in him to ask for—"

"Oh, that fellow? He wasn't begging. He's the man who edits our department on How to Succeed. I give him his money in dribbles to make it last through the month. You'll probably see him lying at the bottom of the stairs in happy unconsciousness when you go out."

AN ITALIAN CAPTAIN

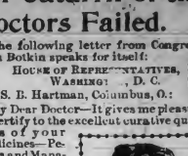
Hon. J. D. Botkin, Congressman from Kansas, Writes an Interesting Letter.

CAPTAIN O. BERTOLETTO.

Captain O. Bertoletto of the Italian Barque "Lincelles," in a recent letter from the chief office of the Italian Barque Lincelles, Pensacola, Fla., writes:

"I have suffered for several years with chronic catarrh of the stomach. The doctors prescribed for me without my receiving the least benefit. Through one of your pamphlets I began the use of Peruna, and two bottles have entirely cured me. I recommend Peruna to all my friends."—O. Bertoletto.

In catarrh of the stomach, as well as catarrh of any part of the body, Peruna is the remedy. As has been often said if Peruna will cure catarrh of one part, it will cure catarrh of any other part of the body.



Catarrh is catarrh wherever located, and the remedy that will cure it anywhere will cure it everywhere.

The following letter from Congressman Botkin speaks for itself:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Dr. S. B. Hartman, Columbus, O.:

My Dear Doctor—It gives me pleasure to certify to the excellent curative qualities of your medicines—Peruna and Manalin. I have been afflicted more or less for a quarter of a century with catarrh of the stomach and constipation. A residence in Washington has increased these troubles. A few bottles of your medicine have given me almost complete relief, and I am sure that a continuation of them will effect a permanent cure. Peruna is surely a wonderful remedy for catarrhal affections.—J. D. Botkin.

This is a case of catarrh of the stomach which had run for twenty-five years, according to his statement, and Peruna has at once come to his relief, promptly accomplishing for him more benefit than he had been able to find in all other remedies during a quarter of a century.

It stands to reason that a man of wealth and influence, like a Congressman of the great United States, has left no ordinary means unfurled and no stone unturned to find a cure.

If such cures as these do not verify the claim not only that dyspepsia is due to catarrh of the stomach, but also that Peruna will cure catarrh of the stomach, it is impossible to imagine how any evidence could do so.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, O.

BOONE CO., RECORDER

Wednesday, - - August 27, 1902.

W. L. RIDDELL, - - Publisher.

For Circuit Clerk.

We are authorized to announce S. E. TERRILL, of Idlewild, as a candidate for Circuit Court Clerk, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

THERE will be innumerable fair ones at the fair this week.

THAT harvestor combine, with its $120,000,000 capital, got into shape too late for this year's wheat crop, but it will be in good shape for business next year.

INSURANCE rates have been advanced in Lexington until the business men have been compelled to organize a company of their own, or allow their property to go uninsured.

IT is announced that the new harvester trust has already discharged about ten thousand employes. The captains of industry have to earn their salary in some way or other, you know.

THE fairs held in Kentucky, this year, have been well patronized, and the exhibitions were unusually good. The Boone fair, this week, will not be an exception, if the weather is favorable.

FROM present indications the contest for the Democratic Gubernatorial nomination in this State, will narrow down to two candidates—Beckham and Breckinridge or Black. Out of the three B's will come the nominee.

THE following item should serve as a warning for both the old and the young men, especially during the fair. Read, reflect and remember: A comely New Castle lady has sued J. J. Hartford, 65, for $2,000 for squeezing her hand.

THIS is the week that has been looked forward to by a large number of Boone's belles and beaux, for a twelve month. No occasion is more auspicious for pleasure than the fair, and the young people of this and adjoining counties take advantage of it. Loving eyes look love into each other.

JOHN HUNTER, an old bachelor of Madison county, who lived alone in a cabin, was robbed of $800 in gold, which he kept in a jar. Had John been married he would not have had so much money on hand for a robber. That was his mistake. Old bachelors, take warning of Hunter's experience.

HITHERTO it has been supposed that there was a surplus of unmarried women in the country, but this condition no longer exists, if it ever did. In every state the unmarried men exceed the unmarried women. Even Massachusetts has a surplus of 5,221 bachelors. There are husbands for all and to spare if men would give up their degenerate existence.

J. W. Waldrop, of Owen county, has published in the News-Herald a request that "all law abiding citizens of the county meet in the court house," on a day mentioned in his request. His intention is a laudable one, but if all the law abiding citizens of Owen county can be assembled in the court house at one time, it is very evident that that class is most woefully in the minority in "Sweet Owen.

IT is somewhat amusing that while the federal administration is professing to be fighting the beef combine for its arbitrary increase of the prices of meat, its department of labor should prepare and publish an elaborate argument purporting to prove that the beef combine had nothing to do with that increase of prices; but it is overwhelmingly ridiculous that the department of labor, in this effort to defend the trust, should furnish the conclusive statistical evidence that it is responsible for this increase of prices.

ACCORDING to the government census of 1900, there are 3,271,121 mules in the United States. It is also stated by the census officials that mules are increasing in this country. According to the numeration in 1890, 157,022 mule colts were foaled in 1889, whereas in 1899 the number had increased to 231,697. The actual increase of the total number of mules in the entire country is said to be some 34 per cent during the past ten years.

HAVING failed to capture the Democratic political machine in this State, Henry Watterson withdraws as a candidate for the Gubernatorial nomination, and gives those whose political favors he had been courting, this parting shot:

"Brought to the point where I must look the situation full in the eye I am appalled by the conditions which the successful candidate for office must need meet and overcome; the rogues and cheats he must court, or cozen; the servility he must effect, or practice, the obligations incur; the personal solicitation, ignoble and humiliating; the use of money more or less corrupt and corrupting; for, though he having an overwhelming majority of the people at his back. There stands the machine, first to be captured and then to be deployed, with all that this implies."

THE Baltimore Sun says: "The tariff revision paragraph in the Iowa republican platform is variously considered. The republican organs as a rule undertake to minimize it. The democratic organs, on the other hand, attach great importance to the deliverance. The significance of a declaration of any kind often depends upon the time and circumstances surrounding it, and it cannot be denied that at this particular time the declaration made in Iowa means far more than the same declaration made a year ago. It is true that the platform of 1901 did contain the substance of the tariff plank of this year. But that was exclusively a local election and had nothing to do with national policy. This year the case is different. The question is a live and a practical one and the intention of the convention was that the eleven republican congressman who will be elected in Iowa this fall will go to Washington pledged to vote for tariff reform upon the lines laid down in this platform."

A SUIT of more than passing interest to both the owners of sheep and the owners of dogs was decided by Judge Lassing in the Boone Circuit Court, last week. A few months since dogs belonging to Harrison Minor, a colored man living in Burlington, killed several sheep and mangled others belonging to Newton Sullivan. The dogs were followed home and killed. Attorney Castleman brought suit for Sullivan against Minor, for the damages he sustained by reason of the killing and mangling of his sheep. Judge Cason was employed to defend and he left nothing undone in his effort to show that Minor was not responsible for the damages which Sullivan was seeking to recover, but the court took a different view of the matter and rendered judgment against Minor for $106. It was the first case of the kind ever tried in the Circuit Court of this county, and the judgment, establishing the liability of the owners of dogs in damages to the owners of sheep they kill, will, no doubt, open up a new field of litigation, and cause a reduction of the number of dogs kept in this county, which is a considerable sheep district.

BELIEVING that with a new method, they can successfully compete against trust prices, Cincinnatians and allies have perfected the organization of the International Leather Company, a $5,000,000 corporation.

Corn News.

All roads lead to the fair at Florence, this week.

This weather would be all right for the fair if the dust was not so bad.

The temperature went down close to the frost point, last Friday night.

The Register pronounces the last fair at Lawrenceburg about the best ever had there.

Florence will be the liveliest town in this part of the State the remainder of this week.

The dining hall at the fair this week is the place to get well prepared meals, served in good style.

The late corn in this locality has been injured considerably by the dry weather of the last few weeks.

Revs. Huey, Baptist, and Conner, Universalist, each preached to a good sized congregation here last Sunday.

Judge Lassing, J. C. Revill, B. B. Allphin and W. E. Vest, are each having a telephone put in their residence.

The heirs of the late John Beall wereat the county clerk's office, last Monday, conveying to James Beall, the old homestead.

Conner & Hogan received considerable tobacco last week from the Bellevue "deestrict." Some of it came in at night.

A couple of strangers claiming Cincinnati as their home were refused license to marry, by county clerk Adams, one day last week.

Judge Roberts is having his annual tussel with hay fever. Of the several afflicted with the disease in Burlington he is having it the worst.

The wheat is about all threshed, and the yield in the county, this year, was about 15 bushels to the acre. Many yields made as much as 30 bushels per acre.

It is strange but nevertheless true that many of the springs that survived the long drought, last year, have failed this summer, notwithstanding the frequent rains.

The reader will not fail to discover the Half Price Clothing Company's advertisement in this issue. Boone county people should read the ad and be in the line up on opening day.

Last Friday and Saturday were examination days for colored teachers. There are nine colored school districts in the county, and five applicants for certificates were examined last week.

Revs. O. M. Huey, of Carrollton, and J. L. Sproles, of Burlington, exchanged pulpits, last Sunday. Rev. Huey and wife have been spending some time with their relatives in this county.

You will see a great many people this week who can tell you exactly how a county fair ought to be run to be a success, and a great many of those same people could not run a slop wagon successfully.

T. J. Hughes, the telephone man of Beaver, was in town, one day last week. Mr. Hughes has purchased a bicycle that is propelled by a gasoline motor. Mr. Hughes is one who keeps up with the improvements of the age.

The corn crop in this immediate locality will not be as good as it would have been had there been a good rain along about the 18th. Burlington appears to be about the center of a small territory that has received less rain, this summer,than anyother part of the county.

Tony Bentler narrowly escaped being seriously injured while operating his engine one day last week. He was backing the engine when his foot slipped off of the break, and the engine ran back, catching him between it and the separator. He was unconscious when released.

A MISSIONARY BAPTIST

Church Organized at the Forks of Gunpowder.

For several months the Burlington and Union Baptist churches have maintained a Mission at Old Gunpowder church. Lately the membership in that neighborhood concluded to organize a Baptist church, and notified the neighboring churches of the North Bend Association to meet with them to assist in organizing. Accordingly on August 22d, a large number of representatives of the various churches convened at the old church, noted alike in history and romance, and amid surroundings beautiful and picturesque, the work of the day was begun by the election of B. F. Swindler, moderator of the council and D. E. Castleman, clerk.

Twenty-one persons signified by producing church letters, their intention to become members. Next, the Statement of the Articles of Faith, were presented by B. W. Adams, who has been much interested in the work there, and by vote of the Council the Statement was approved and the local organization encouraged and recognized, after which the Church Covenant was read, with profound solemnity and strong emotions, affecting both the little band of bold followers of Christ and visitors, while a grand old hymn filled the building and echoed from hill to hill, the brethren and sisters, by a grasp of the hand, plighted their fidelity one to another and to "the Faith once delivered to the Saints.

A large crowd was present, the order and attention as good as ever witnessed, and the hospitality unbounded, much credit throughout being due to friends living near the church.

A splendid sermon by B. F. Swindler, and a pointed "charge to the church," by Elmer Atwood, were features of the occasion.

Those who, a few mornings since "rubbered" on the telephone line connecting this office and the residence of W. W. Grimsley, at the mouth of Big Bone creek heard the following conversation:

"Hello!"

"Hello!"

"Is this the RECORDER?"

"Yes, who are you?"

"Billie Grimsley."

"Well, Billey, what's the trouble?"

"I just wanted to say to the RECORDER, that this part of the county was never in as prosperous condition as it is now. Corn will make 10 barrels to the acre straight through, and the horse weeds are 16 feet high. Wheat made a good yield. The traction road is sure to be built. You see this end of the county is going clear ahead of the north end, and we will move the county seat to Union."

"Say, Billie, we do not see any necessity for moving the county seat in your direction."

"Why not?"

"Because from the very recent arrivals at the county hotel here in Burlington it looks very much like many of your people have a desire to locate in Burlington," and then Billie rang off.

Just Look At Her.

Edward Webb, son of Lewis Webb, many years ago a surveyor in this county, died at his home in Home City, Ohio, on the 20th inst. Mr. Webb was a bachelor, aged 73 years. He was a man of great literary attainments and a sculptor of considerable merit. His brother, L. W. Webb, is the only member of the family that survives. The interment was at 10 a. m. at Hebron last Friday.

In a speech before the Trimble county Institute, a few days since, Mr. D. C. Peck urged the teachers to work faithfully and be patient, declaring that their reward would ultimately come. He said, "It was 40 years before I got my reward," when he exhibited to the Institute the gold headed cane presented to him a few days before by his old students of Boone county, and said, "Here it is."

Ex-Sheriff Beall is starting a "duckery." He is stocking up with wild duckletts which he finds down on Gunpowder. The most recent acquisition to his "duckery" is a very fine specimen of ducklett he discovered and captured a few days since. Several persons have scrutinized the young fowl and are satisfied that it is something out of the ordinary.

K. J. MORRIS, A. M., Principal.

A Little child of Cory Utz, of Pt. Pleasant neighborhood, drank of concentrated lye, one day last week from the effects of which it died after severe suffering of several hours.

It seems that more than one party of capitalists are becoming interested in the Milton and Covington traction road, and those who have been taking an interest in the road are growing more sanguine every day of its being built at an early date.

For some time the Recorder has been reaching the Hume and Berkshire offices from two to three days late, which is owing to the way the bundles are handled enroute, as they always leave the Burlington postoffice at 1:45 p. m. on Wednesday. An effort is being made to locate the cause of the delay.

Master Harold Gaines came very near getting seriously hurt Saturday afternoon. He attempted to cross the street in front of Jack Sandford's buggy and was knocked down by the front wheel, it and the rear wheel both passing over his body. A few slight bruises were the extent of his injuries.

The drowning of the only daughter of Judge O'Rear, of Frankfort, at Fernbank, Ohio, last Friday evening was a sad affair. She arrived that evening to visit a friend at Fernbank, and she and two others had gone out in the river in a canoe to ride the waves of a passing boat, when their frail craft was capsized. Her two companions were rescued after having been in the river for an hour, clinging to the canoe.

Base Ball.

Hurry! Hurry!! Hurry!! That is exactly what the Erlanger ball team did for two innings in the game here last Saturday afternoon, making 10 runs and securing what was thought to be a 40 to 1 shot on the victory. In these two innings Burlington made 5 runs, and from that time on the visitors were allowed to get only three men across home plate, while they continued to odd runs until in eight times at the bat they had 14. The score sheet shows 10 hits for Erlanger and 8 for Burlington; struck out, by Hughes, 7; by Powers, 13. Hughes was wild at times and worked Ernst hard behind the bat. It was an exciting game, and had the Erlanger boys been up in base running they would have won in a walk. The feature of the game was McKim's base running.

The Erlanger club is composed of as gentleman set of players as ever visited Burlington, and it is evident that they have the support of their home people, as they accompany them by scores and root for them with a vengeance.

Innings	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	—

NOTES.

The Erlanger boys did some nice stick work.

Drs. Slater and McCullum occupied seats in the grand stand.

The game was witnessed by a large and good humored crowd.

Moderate batting and good head work has won many a game of ball.

Several prominent Erlanger business men were on hand to root for their boys.

Erlanger out played Burlington on the infield. They made several nice pick-ups.

The Burlington rooters kept very quiet during the first two innings. They were chilled through and through.

In his pursuit of a foul fly Ernst, the Burlington catcher, ran completely over John Gilligan. Neither was hurt.

The duet by the megaphone man and Joe Revill's donkey annoyed some of the boys who were engaged in the game.

Had Jack Sandford been an Indian rubber man he might have been able to have caught more of the bad throws to first.

Burlington took all three games, but two of them were so close as to be uncomfortable until the last man of the opposition was out.

Joseph Scott attended the Carthage, Ohio, fair, last week with eight of his registered Jerseys, and captured six premiums out of seven exhibits—1st on herd; 1st on cow any age and 1st on sweetakes.

Tommie Rice has a new buggy for the fair.

Perry Rice is sojourning in Burlington for a few days.

The Boone County colored Teachers' Institute will be held in Burlington, beginning Sept. 8.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and, therefore, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucus surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

CONVICTS MUTINED.

Desperate [illegible] Attempt to Gain Their Liberty.

One of the Wounded Desperadoes, Wallace Bishop, Died Later—The Wounds of the Others Are Not Thought Fatal.

Frankfort, Ky., Aug. 21.—Fired by a desire to gain their freedom, Wallace Bishop and Thomas Mulligan, of Kenton county, and Lafayette Brooks, of Morgan county, all murderers and desperate criminals, made a futile attempt to escape from the state penitentiary here Wednesday morning and as a result Bishop lay for hours in a critical condition at the hospital with a bullet wound in his breast, Brooks is shot through the shoulder and Alfred Ransome, colored, a Louisville murderer, who [illegible] moments essayed to follow the three daring murderers, is suffering from a wound in the shoulder. The mutiny, which lasted for four and a half hours and ended in an ignominious surrender by the convicts, caused great excitement within the prison and among the people of Frankfort. The convicts chose what they considered a most propitious time for their outbreak. Selecting the breakfast for their dash for liberty, when they hoped to stampede a large number of prisoners, they overpowered the guards with their pistols, captured Charles Willis, a foreman of the reed department of the chair factory, and using him as a shield entrenched themselves in a room where they defied the officials. It was not until they discovered that Warden Eph Lillard intended to starve them out that they decided to surrender.

Ransome was shot by Eph Lillard, jr., while the men were entrenched. Bishop was wounded as he was surrendering, because when told to hold up his hands he attempted to put one of them in his pocket as if reaching for a weapon, and Brooks was wounded by a stray ball at the time Bishop fell.

Wallace Bishop is said to be only the alias of the convict shot in the mutiny. His name is said to be Burns, and it is also said that he is a member of a well to do family in St. Louis.

Brooks made a statement to the warden Wednesday afternoon. He places the responsibility for the attempted outbreak on Wallace Bishop. He says that he and the other two men had worn shackles constantly for months for bad conduct and that Bishop assured them that he could get them out.

Wednesday afternoon Bishop, who can not survive, joined the Catholic church and called for Acting Warden Madigan, he asked forgiveness for the attempt upon that official's life. It is now stated upon good authority that Guard George Fry, of Marion county, fired the shot which wounded Bishop.

Wallace Bishop, alias Burns, who led the outbreak and was fatally shot, died Wednesday night. He was conscious up to an hour or so before his death and made peace with enemies, including Deputy Warden Madigan, whom he had sworn to kill. At his request Father Major, of the Catholic church, was sent for and baptized him shortly before he died. His family lives at Hammond, Ind., and the body will be sent there for burial. Guard Geo. Fry fired the shot that killed Bishop. Fry says that Bishop made a move to draw a gun and that he was satisfied the latter intended to kill Capt. Madigan. Acting on this belief he shot Bishop.

A RACE WAR.

One White Wounded and Three Negroes Reported Killed.

[illegible] was received here Thursday by Sheriff Long from Deputy Sheriff Sam Young at Shannon, asking that the sheriff come immediately to that place. A report was current here that three Negroes had been killed and that James Randolph, one of the best known citizens of the county, who assisted in the arrest of other Negroes, had been shot. This report caused considerable excitement and fears were entertained that further trouble might follow. Later in the day it was ascertained that Mr. Randolph had been shot seriously. The origin of the difficulty grew out of the stealing of some corn out of the field of the Messrs. Eubanks, three miles west of Shannon, by a Negro named Davenport, who was caught in the act and made to pour the corn out of his sack. The following night the Messrs. Eubanks went to the field to lookout for thieves and on returning were fired on by a squad of about 40 Negroes who were lined up alongside the road. None of the shots took effect. Messrs. Randolph, Rogers and Barnett were deputized to arrest those implicated in the shooting and followed three Negroes into Chickasaw county. The Negroes barricaded themselves in a barn, armed with shotguns. When they refused to open the door it was broken in and Randolph struck a match when the Negroes immediately opened fire on him, hitting him in the head and shoulder. The Negroes ran out and one of them was struck by the shots fired at them in the darkness. It is reported by the parties who came here Thursday afternoon from the vicinity that three Negroes have been killed. Deputies brought to jail Thursday night eight Negroes.

Sheriff Long has returned from Shannon and reports everything quiet.

Havre, Mont., Aug. 22.—During a shooting affray early Thursday morning between white and colored troops at Fort Assinaboine Private Taylor, of the 24th infantry, was shot and is expected to die, and Private Poag, white, of the 13th cavalry, was shot and may not recover. Traylor drew his revolver and fired into the air during an altercation and Poag replied with three shots, taking effect in Traylor's body. At a late hour both men were in a very serious condition.

Usually at this time of the year there are 300,000 tons of hard coal within the corporate limits. Heretofore unlimited quantities could be purchased at $7.25 a ton, but Thursday the majority of the dealers were asking $8.50 a ton and some of them wanted $9.

TAFT REACHES MANILA

The Civil Governor Was Given a Rousing Reception.

Eight Large Arches Erected and 20,000 Natives From Neighboring Provinces Participated in the Demonstrations.

Manila, Aug. 26.—Civil Gov. Taft reached here Friday morning at daylight on board the United States gunboat Gen. Alava from Singapore, Straits Settlement. He was welcomed with an enthusiastic popular demonstration.

Manila, Aug. 23.—The day had been made a holiday and the city was decorated. Eight large arches had been erected on the streets. Twenty thousand natives from adjoining provinces participated in the demonstrations in honor of the governor's arrival. There was a parade of vessels in the bay and 30 decorated craft carrying members of the civil commission, military officers and the reception committee, met the Gen. Alva down the bay and escorted Gov. Taft to the entrance of the Pasig river. The governor was escorted by a large procession to the palace in the walled city where a public reception was held.

Responding to an address of welcome, Gov. Taft outlined the progress and the result of his negotiations at Rome in the matter of the Philippine friars, and said that all church questions were progressing toward a satisfactory settlement. The governor said the action taken by congress concerning the Philippine islands showed that the American people honestly desired to help the Filipinos. The Americans were determined the islands should not be exploited by americans at the expense of the Filipinos. Gov. Taft predicted that eventually the archipelago would have practically free trade, and he congratulated the Filipino people upon the restoration of peace. He advised the Filipinos to till the soil and restore their country rather than waste time in useless political agitation. He promised personality to labor for the natives and asked for their confidence and support.

Gov. Taft was given an ovation on the streets of the city during his progress to the palace and he received another ovation at his reception.

A TERRIFIC CRASH.

One Killed and 20 Injured in a Trolley Car Accident.

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 23.—A cable car crowded with passengers got away from the gripman at the top of the Ninth street incline at the Union Station here and dashing to the bottom at a terrific speed crashed into a train that was stalled there. The passengers were hurled in every direction and the grip car on the runaway train and the rear coach of the other train were reduced to a mass of twisted iron and splinters.

W. B. Taylor, the gripman on the first train, was instantly killed and at least 20 persons were injured.

The incline, which has been the scene of several fatal accidents, is 300 yards in length and descends at an angle of 45 degrees to an elevated platform.

A grip car and one coach at the bottom of the incline was being switched to the opposite track, preparatory to the climb back to town.

Before this could be accomplished, dozens of persons crowded into the train. In another minute a train appeared at the top of the hill, heavily laden with passengers. The gripman had lost control of his car, and in another instant 80 passengers were being hurled down the steep hillside. A panic ensued both on the descending car and among the crowd below. On the platform in the scramble to escape many were trampled upon and several persons fainted, while a score of passengers on the runaway train jumped from the sides of the cars rolling over and over on the trestle work. The train struck the switching cars with a terrific crash, rendering the waiting train a mass of debris. Gripman Taylor was found dead, buried under the wreckage, while two dozen persons sprawled about. Half of the injured were only stunned or bruised.

Six suffering from broken limbs, bad cuts and internal injuries were taken to nearby hotels, while a score of others, cut and bruised, were taken to their homes.

THE MIMIC WAR ENDED

White Squadron Defeated By the Blue Squadron.

An Incident in One of the Most Interesting Chapters in the Peace History of the United States Navy.

Rockport, Mass., Aug. 25.—The naval search problem on the New England coast was terminated at 5:40 Sunday morning by the signal "Surrender; demand an unconditional" from Rr. Adm. Higginson's flagship, and the reply "Accept surrender" from the fore truck of the Prairie, Commander Pillsbury's flagship. The battle between the blue, or defending squadron, and the white, or attacking squadron, was thus quickly ended eight miles south of Thatcher's Island. The enemy had most signally failed to make a harbor, having for its object Salem. A preponderance of fighting strength, relatively 64 points, represented by the battleships Kearsarge, Alabama and Massachusetts, Scorpion and a torpedo boat, had overwhelmed the 45 points represented by the auxiliary cruisers Prairie, Panther and Supply. To speak from a theoretic standpoint the white squadron was entirely destroyed by the guns of the defending battleships. Thus on the fourth night the game of naval strategy was brought to an end, it having covered a period of unceasingly and sleepless nights of anxious and wearing vigil and of grave uncertainty to its participants.

The destruction of Pillsbury's squadron occurred at a point just within the outer limit of Gloucester harbor not over eight miles southerly from Thatcher's island, off which had been anchored since Wednesday when the war game was declared opened the three powerful battleships of the blue squadron.

The surrounding and "putting out of action" of the squadron in command of Commander Pillsbury was the culminating incident in one of the most interesting chapters in the peace history of the American navy. For the placing in operation of the maneuvers of the warships off the coast of New England the navy had long prepared itself and had long looked forward with keen anticipation. As planned by the naval authorities at Washington, two squadrons were to be put into the game, one the blue, the defending fleet, and the other the white, to be a hostile fleet bent upon effecting an anchorage in some unprotected harbor on the coast from Cape Elizabeth to Cape Cod, opposed all the time by the first named fleet. This anchorage had to be maintained against the defenders for a period of six hours. Commander Pillsbury's white squadron consisted of the auxiliary cruisers Prairie (flagship), Panther and Supply. The two former boats were each assigned 20 points of fighting strength, while the Supply was assumed to represent five points. Adm. Higginson's fleet was actually superior in the number of its members and by the same arrangements made as to the Pillsbury ships it represented a grand total of 97 points of strength.

The Kearsarge, the Alabama and the Massachusetts battleships were given 20, the cruisers Brooklyn and Olympia eight each, the Cincinnati and Montgomery, Gloucester, Mayflower and Scorpion three points each, while a number of torpedo boats made up the remaining numbers. To win in the mimic war the blue squadron had to bring against the attacking vessels, as it did early Sunday, warships superior in their combined assumed fighting power. Each side had the right to capture individual craft of the other fleet by overcoming them in point of strength and under the rules of the game the captured vessels were to retire altogether from the field of action.

In the defeat of Pillsbury, the defense, with three battleships, the Scorpion and with a single torpedo boat, had 64 points, so that the balance was against the attacking squadron. Throughout the mimic war there was placed in operation a system of coast defense which was admittedly of credit to those who were engaged in it.

Bloody Battle Between Whites and Blacks at Indianapolis.

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 25.—A race riot here broke out at Haughville, a suburb of this city, Sunday between 200 Negroes and whites employed by the National Malleable Casting Co. There has been bitter race feeling between them for several years and trouble has frequently broken out. Two people have already been killed. A ball game Sunday morning between the two factions caused excitement. As the crowd left the field hostilities broke out. Stones, bricks, clubs and other missiles were used. Two hundred persons were immediately crushed together in a fighting mass. Twelve or fifteen shots were fired and it is reported that one Negro was shot, but he was slipped from the field before the police arrived. The whites were victorious, driving the blacks from the field and wounding a number of them. Several white people were badly injured. Arrests have been made and others will be made as rapidly as the persons are found. The police responded to a riot call but on account of the distance did not arrive till the fight had been fought to a finish. Officers of the company fear other outbreaks will follow.

WENT OVER TRESTLE.

Three Killed and Two Badly Hurt Near Georgetown, Ind.

Trains Collided on the Trestle, Cars Piling on the Locomotives, and All Went Down Into the Ravine Below.

New Albany, Ind., Aug. 25.—In a freight wreck on the Southern railway, near Georgetown, ten miles west of here, early Sunday, Engineer "Red" Duval, Fireman B. Cox and Brakeman Ross, of one train, were killed outright, and Engineer Harry Goodall and Fireman George Myers, of the other train, were proably fatally hurt. Fourteen box cars loaded with wheat together with two locomotives were tumbled over a trestle to a ravine 40 feet below and were demolished. All the traffic on the southern railway between Louisville and St. Louis has been blocked all day. Two sections of the through freight were coming east and the first section, in charge of Conductor Walter Alvis, had stopped at Duncans to switch, leaving a "cut" of cars on the main track. There is a heavy grade at this point, and by some means the cars broke away and rolled down the track, gaining momentum at each revolution of the wheels. Just as the runaway cars were approaching the trestle, the second section, drawn by two big moguls, came thundering over the hill, and the crash occurred a moment later. The cars piled over the locomotives and all went down into the ravine in a heap. Both Duval and Cox went down with their locomotive. Ross was on one of the runaway cars and was crushed beneath it. Engineer Goodall and Fireman Myers, in charge of the other locomotive, jumped and saved their lives, although they may yet die.

Conductor A. G. Lewis and Brakeman John Burns, of the second section, jumped and escaped serious injury. Duval's body was taken to his home in Louisville, and that of Ross was sent to Milltown, Ind., his home. Cox's remains were sent to Princeton, where his relatives reside. Duval had been married but a few days ago. The loss to the railroad company will amount to about $75,000.

Engineers Goodall and Duval, Fireman Cox, Brakeman Ross and Myers were buried in the debris. There was great difficulty in extricating Myers; his voice could he heard for hours before he was removed. Cox, Ross and Duval were dead when found. Goodall's right shoulder and head were badly smashed. Brakeman Myers was not seriously hurt. Brakeman Oshurn was supposed to have been on the cut-off cars. But little can be gained from officials at the division here. The wrecking train went to the scene of the collision loaded with timebrs to rebuild the trestle. Mrs. Goodall, wife of the engineer, was taken to Georgetown on one of the specials. Traffic east of Huntingburg has been suspended. All trains ran from Huntingburg over the Evansville branch thence to Louisville over the Henderson route. From all reports this is the worst wreck on the division in many years. It is necessary to use two locomotives for freight trains in order to get over the hill at this point. A gloom has been cast over Princeton.

HEAD ON COLLISION.

Three People Killed and Many Badly Injured Near Norfolk, Va.

Norfolk, Va., Aug 25.—In a head-on collision between two cars on the Bay Shore Terminal line late Sunday three people were killed and many others badly injured.

The accident occurred about three and one-half miles from Norfolk. One car was coming from Ocean View and the other going to the View. The orders were that the south-bound car should wait at the siding for the other. Motorman W. S. Yandall failed to obey the orders and the crash came 400 yards beyond the siding. Yandall endeavored to jump, but was crushed in the telescoped cars. Motorman C. D. Colden, of the other car, applied his air brakes as soon as he saw the danger, the collision occurring on a curve, and then tried to jump, as did Linwood Fentress, son of R. B. Fentress, president of the Norfolk Cold Storage & Ice Co. Both Colden and Young Fentress were caught under the platform of the shore-bound car, which piled upon the other, and were killed outright. Both cars were full of Sunday excursionists and few escaped injury.

Washington, Aug. 23.—The artillery companies stationed at the defenses of Long Island are to be given an opportunity to brush upon their marksmanship just before the naval attack of the North Atlantic squadron under Rr. Adm. Higginson begins. During the interval between August 25, the closing day of the national search problem which is now in progress, and September 1, the maneuvers are scheduled to begin, extensive large practice will be indulged in at the defenses named and also at the other forts along the New England coast. The principal feature of the practice at the Long Island forts will be firing at moving targets, proficiency in which is particularly needful of the impending attack of the war vessels. The targets are rigged in various ways, some of them being fashioned to represent a warship. They are to be drawn past the forts, ... ings. A number of the ordnance officers on duty at the war department left Washington Friday night to be present at the target work, and Gen. Crozier, chief ordnance officer, who is a member of Gen. MacArthur's staff, is expected to view the work at the several forts.

The war department will issue an order in a few days giving instructions to govern competition in this target practice along the coast.

Orders were issued by the war department Friday detailing a number of additional officers in connection with the joint maneuvers. Maj. Garland N. Whistler and Capt. William Chamberlain, of the artillery corps, have been ordered to New London to report to Gen. Randolph, chief of artillery, who will leave shortly for that place for duty during the maneuvers. Maj. George P. Scriven and First Lieut. Henry S. Hathaway, of the signal corps, have been ordered also to New London to report for duty at Fort Greely. First Lieut. Alfred T. STATE NEWS HAPPENINGS.

LITTLE ZODA VICK.

Whole Male Population Turned Out to Hunt For Her Murderer.

Russellville, Ky., Aug. 21.—Zoda, the 15-year-old daughter of C. M. Vick, a prominent farmer of this county, was murdered Wednesday afternoon in sight of her father's house. She had been sent to the spring for milk for dinner and failing to return search was instituted. About 4 o'clock the body with head crushed was found in a fence corner partly covered with leaves. One hundred men with bloodhounds have gone to the scene of the murder and if the guilty person is caught a lynching will follow. The Vick home is about five miles from town, near asphalt mines.

Russellville, Ky., Aug. 22.—The murder of pretty little Zoda Vick Wednesday continues to be the absorbing topic. The business houses were all closed Thursday and the whole male population turned out to aid in the hunt for the murderer.

A reward of $500 has been offered by the county judge for his capture, and Gov. Beckham has offered an additional reward of $500, making a total of $1,000. Never in the history of the county were the citizens so wrought up. The murder of Miss Vick is the most brutal in Logan county's annals of crime.

Hugh Marshall, a former employe of the Vick family, is supposed to have been connected with the murder. On searching Marshall's house he was not to be found and had sent his family to a near-by neighbor. Upon investigation a pair of trousers spattered with blood was found and an attempt had been made to cut out the spots with scissors. Marshall is still at large.

TOOK HIS OWN LIFE.

Hugh Marshall, Suspected of Murdering Zoda Vick, Hanged Himself.

Russellville, Ky., Aug. 23.—Hugh Marshall, the man suspected of the murder of Miss Zola Vick, committed suicide and his body was found hanging in a barn Friday afternoon.

It was about a mile and a half from the scene of the tragedy, and from the condition of the body he had been dead for about 18 hours.

He had fastened a halter to a rafter, and then placing the noose about his neck, had stepped off between the joists. Thus ends the most horrible tragedy in the history of this part of the state.

The men are returning to their homes satisfied that the murder of pretty Zoda Vick has been avenged even by the hands of the murderer himself.

Marshall spent part of the night at his home, and after eating supper went straight to the barn to die by his own hands. It is really remarkable how he eluded the posses, as at all times they were almost upon him, and more than once were within a stone's throw of him.

Many Exhibitors From A Distance Contested For The Liberal Premiums.

The attendance on the first day of the seventh annual exhibition of the North Kentucky Agricultural Association, was not so large as on the corresponding day last year, but the show in both the ring and stock pens was the best in the history of the fair on the first day. The horse show in the afternoon was especially good, while the stock pens were full of as fine sheep as the country produces, and the herdsmen present flocked to the pens by the scores to admire the sheep.

The display in Floral Hall was not so large as some previous shows in that department on the first day, but the quality of the articles on exhibition was seldom if ever excelled, and they were a source of great attraction for the ladies.

The work of putting down cement side walks goes bravely on. Ground has been broken in front of the Matson warehouse, Mrs. Hattie Vest's residence, the school house, the Methodist church, the parsonage lot, and will be continued in front of the Hinds property to the Beaver grade. The cement pavement leading up to the handsome school house will give a finished appearance to the stately building, and command the admiration of all visitors to our neat little village.

It is frequently remarked that melons are exceptionally good this season, and are very reasonable in price. A very prominent physician of our town had been frequently solicited by one of his particular friends, who lives in the watermelon producing belt of the county to come down. It is about 22 miles from here. Finally he wrote the doctor, inviting him to come down and get a load of the luscious fruit. Being thus implored the doctor looked about him for a companion in the long and dusty journey. His choice fell upon a thriving young farmer on the Lexington 'pike about two miles south of town. He was enthusiastic on the situation. Here was a man who had so many melons that they were in his way, and it would only cost a trifle to get a load home. They hired a spring wagon and set out on the trip in high spirits, and such was their exaltation that they were careless in driving and let the wagon upset and spill them out on the highway. This was more than nothing for men who were out for a good time with so little expense. They finally arrived at their destination and found the farmer friend had pulled and piled 45 melons out in the sun. He then brought a very large one from the cellar—it filled a big dish pan when cut open—and they tackled it with vim. It was glorious and more than realized the anticipations that had kept their mouths watering for 22 long, dusty miles. They were realizing the gourmand's dream of elysium, and the supreme happiness of Nirvana was almost theirs, when the weird enchantment was soon dispelled. The doctor asked the farmer how much was the bill, when the latter protested against making any charge. "Tut, tut!" said the doctor; "you are a poor man and we want to pay for what we get." The fruit was already in the wagon. "Well," said the grower of melons, after studying a few minutes, "20 cents a piece is about right." The doctor paid it with the same cheery smile usually lighting up his countenance, and then the two left for home, knowing they had paid double price for the melons. This was not all—as many of them was so far from maturity as to have the flavor, to some persons obnoxious, of gourds. The wife of the doctor's friend, when the journey had been related to her, inquired if they were drunk.

GOD'S WARNING CALL.

One of the Prophets of Old Voices a Message for To-day.

Sermon by the "Highway and Byway" Preacher Emphasizing the Certainty of Meeting God, and the Need of Preparation.

Text.—"Prepare to meet thy God."—Amos 4:12.

A Message for To-Day.—These words are addressed to Israel by the prophet Amos, after the nation has persistently refused to hear and heed the message which God has sent unto them. The days of grace are past and judgment has fallen. No longer does God stand pleading that Israel will repent and turn from its sin, but the thunder-tones of His wrath send forth the message: "Prepare to meet thy God." In these five short, simple words flashes the keen, two-edged sword of God's Spirit, and, falling, pierces "even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit." God has patiently borne with His people. He has sought by every circumstance of life to arouse them to a sense of their obligation to Him. He sent scarcity of food and famine, "yet have ye not returned unto Me," saith the Lord. He sent drought, and then let rain fall on one city and not on another, upon one piece of ground, and not upon another section lying adjacent thereto, so that two or three cities were compelled to go unto one city to drink water, "yet have ye not returned unto Me," saith the Lord. He sent the mildew and the blasting upon the growing grain; and the devouring worms ruined the gardens and vineyards and fig and olive trees, "yet have ye not returned unto Me," saith the Lord. The pestilence of disease had swept over their land, and in conflict with the nations about the young men had been slain with the sword, and the scandals and evils growing up out of the military camps had shocked the whole nation, "yet have ye not returned unto Me," saith the Lord. The iniquity of some in the nation was so great that God had to destroy them as He overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and those who escaped the fire of God's wrath were as brands plucked out of the burning, "yet have ye not returned unto Me," saith the Lord.

"Therefore (because all this is true) thus will I do unto thee, O Israel: and because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O, Israel."

"For, lo, He that formeth the mountains, and createth the wind, and declareth unto man what is His thought, that maketh the morning darkness, and treadeth upon the high places of the earth, the Lord, the God of Hosts, is His name."

This is the message which God sent to His self-willed and self-seeking children by the hand of His prophet Amos. We read it. We readily see the iniquity and sins of the children of Israel. We marvel at their indifference to the solemn warning and pleading of God. We see them rejecting the message of God's prophets and doubting the truth of their words. While the terrible judgments of God's wrath are hanging over them they refuse to believe anything but that they will continue to eat, drink and be merry and yield to every desire in the days to come, as they have in the past. We see the certain judgments of God fall upon them after they have persistently and willfully refused to hear God's last call. We see the awful scourge of war sweep over the land, we see the wives and children, the young men and maidens wearing the yoke of their conquerors and going into captivity, all coming to pass just as God said it would. We see all this. We know that when God speaks it shall surely come to pass, notwithstanding the ease and luxury of our homes, and the influence of our friends, and the prominence of our position in society, and our business and professional success, and the size of our bank account; notwithstanding our vigor of health, and our fullness of joy as we delight ourselves in the attractions and luxuries of the world. We know that nothing we have or are, that nothing which our friends have or are, that not even the loved ones in Heaven who are awaiting our coming can change one jot or tittle of God's word and prevent His judgment falling upon us if we refuse to hear and heed. And knowing this, let us stop in the mad rush of life and reason together out of God's Word, so that we shall not be caught as a thief in the night when our Lord comes and exacts a final accounting with us.

Face to Face with Eternity.—Do you realize that you are face to face with eternity, that but a breath is between you and death? Not a day goes by but some experience in our own lives, some item of news, brings this fact to our attention, and God would drive it home to our hearts if we would only let Him. There is no period in the life upon earth when the soul can say that it is not face to face with eternity.

As well might the tiny molecule, which has to be searched out with the microscope to be seen, boast itself of its size while the great earth supports its teeming millions of people and the stars and planets of the universe roll in space, as for you, oh, man, to boast yourself of life and what it holds for you, for what is it in comparison to eternity? In France two or three weeks ago there went speeding over the highway the $12,000 auto of the Vanderbilts and his fair wife. How much life had for them. Rich and influential, and full of plans. A new auto building, more powerful and magnificent than the one in which they were riding. A palatial residence in San Francisco, upon which alterations and improvements were to be made amounting to $5,000,000, and the contracts for the work only awaiting the return of the young couple to be signed and the work begun. How full and real and certain seemed life as they glided with the swiftness of the wind across the country to the gay scenes of Paris. How dim and unlikely seemed death and the threshold of eternity. The peasants stopping in their work and leaning on their hoes gazed after them and envied them their lot, and thought of the years which yet seemed before them and of all the luxury and travel and pleasure that would be counted off to them in the days of the years as they rolled around one by one. And lo, while they are gazing the rushing auto swerves to one side, and with the suddenness of the lightning flash the crash comes, death's silence settles down upon the fair young pair as they lie amidst the wreckage, and their souls are in eternity.

Four Important Points.—There are four essential points to our text. As Mr. Moody used to put it: 1. There is one God. 2. We are accountable to Him. 3. We must meet Him. 4. We need preparation to meet Him. Let us turn our thoughts to the first point. There is one God. One God, the Creator. One God, the Ruler of the universe. One God, the lover of men's souls and the hater of sin. One God, the Saviour of men. One God who is all this. And because He is the one and only God, "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me." Is this a message for to-day? We carry it to the heathen lands, where the hideous little gods have their place in every home and receive the worship and adoration of its inmates. We know it is a message for those darkened lands, but ours is a Christian land, with no shrines in our homes and no ugly images before which we fall down and worship. And because of this are there no strange gods that are claiming our worship and our service? How about the god of pleasure, the god of gold, the god of social supremacy, the god of self-will and self-indulgence, the god of pride and worldly ambition, the god of religious forms and ceremonies. Read the last half of the fifth chapter of Amos if you want to see how zealous in outward religious activity the children of Israel were. They had their feast days, their burnt offerings and meat offerings, and peace offerings as in days of yore, when they ascended as a sweet smelling savor to the Lord from consecrated hearts. But God says: "I hate, I despise your feast days, and I will not smell your solemn assemblies." They had their fine church music, but God says: "Take thou away from Me the noise of thy songs; for I will not hear the melody of thy viols." Why was this? Because there was no longer one God before them, but "Moloch and Chiun, your images, the star of your god, which ye made to yourselves." Gods of their own making and which were being served in the form of their many religious activities. There is a god in every heart, there is a god in every home, there is a god in every church in the land. If it is not the one God of Spiritual power and presence, it is a god of human making, and abhorrent to the one God of Heaven.

The second point before us is that we are accountable to Him. Cain was accountable to God for the killing of his brother Abel. It is significant that Scripture gives no record of the parents calling their son to account for his awful sin, but tells of the wicked youth being brought face to face with his God, the one to whom he was first accountable and from whose searching gaze he could not escape. The all-important question was not what would father or mother say or do, but what does God think about it, what will He do? The all-important question to you, my friend, is not your standing in the community, not what your friends or relatives say or think about you, but what is my standing before God, whom I am to meet some day face to face? David with the crimes of murder and adultery blackening his soul was accountable to God. He realized it after he had hidden his sin for months and tried to account to his family and his nation for his sin by making the widow of the man he had cruelly slain in battle his wife. When David got into the presence of the Lord, upon his face, he cries: "Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in Thy sight." God is the final auditor of all accounts. We cannot escape His searching eye or the record of Heaven. Fine speeches before the throne of God will not prevail. We may plead: "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? and in Thy name have cast out devils? and in Thy name done many wonderful works?" But the Lord will look deeper than the mere outward profession of the life and will say to many a soul: "Depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Are you more concerned about the opinion of those about you than you are as to what God thinks of you? Remember that your final accounting is to be with Him. Are you eye servers and men pleasers? Remember that the eye of God runs to and fro through the whole earth and sees your every action and fathoms every hidden thought, and that it is to Him that the final account is to be rendered.

And you will meet Him face to face some day. This is our third point. Adam and Eve sought to avoid God after they had violated His command. Sin made them shrink from His holy presence. But they had to meet Him. And so does every soul. By thoughtlessness or willful choice we can shut God out of our lives here in this life, but when the soul is ushered into eternity by the hand of death it comes face to face with its Creator. God's Word gives us two remarkable pictures of souls coming into the presence of God. One is in the vision of Isaiah and the other is found in the twenty-second chapter of Matthew in the parable of the marriage supper. One portrays a soul coming during the earthly life, into the presence of God, the other of one who has come after the earthly life into the marriage supper of the Lamb, without the wedding garment of preparation. Isaiah, this side the grave, realizes the righteousness of God and his own sinful condition, and cries out: "Woe is me! for I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." And when the soul comes to God with that cry, He does for it what the live coal from off God's altar did for Isaiah. He cleanses from all sin.

But the man without the wedding garment on, having refused to hear God's voice in this life and prepare to meet Him, stands speechless in His presence. Isaiah was able to utter a cry for mercy, but the man without the wedding garment, having sinned away the day of grace, is face to face with judgment.

Face to face with God means something. And because of its solemn and eternal import, we come to our fourth point. We need preparation to meet Him. "Prepare to meet thy God." There is escape even yet for the wayward children of Israel, and following this solemn call of God to them as voiced by our text there comes in the fifth chapter the tender pleading: "Seek the Lord, and ye shall live." A last chance of preparation before judgment falls and they come face to face with God. In the recent coronation of King Edward you could not help but be struck by the importance attaching to every one in attendance being in proper dress. Every detail of the dress of every rank and every personage there was weighed with the utmost care, and failure to provide the garment designated would have excluded from the brilliant crowning scene in Westminster Abbey.

Even in unconventional America great importance is unconsciously attached to appropriateness in dress. The laborer in silk hat and patent leather shoes would attract instant attention and become the mark for the irreverent street urchin. The bank president with overalls on as he sat at his desk during banking hours would be adjudged insane and sent to the asylum. The lady with the party dress who would don her finery to go to the store to do her marketing would set all the gossiping tongues of the neighborhood to wagging. We do not realize how conventional we really are until some irregularity in dress forces it upon the attention. To have on the proper garment is really very essential. It is absolutely essential that the soul should be clothed upon with the proper garment in preparation for meeting God. The man who had not on the wedding garment was cast out from the feast. So will you be cast out from the presence of God if you have not on the garment of His righteousness furnished in Christ Jesus. All our own garments (or righteousness, as Isaiah calls them) are as filthy rags. A repentant heart must strip the soul of self. David cries: "A broken and a contrite heart, oh God, Thou wilt not despise." Here is the first step in preparation for meeting God. Consciousness of sin and a repentant heart. John the Baptist came bearing that message. Christ began His ministry with that cry upon His lips. That is the message of the Gospel today. Repent, for "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." And as we hear that message and believe it we become stripped of our own righteousness and become clothed in the spotless garment of Christ's righteousness. Then we are ready to meet our God.

Daily Preparation.—In connection with this text is a beautiful thought for the followers of Jesus Christ. That of fellowship day by day with Him, which makes the heart glad at the thought of meeting God, the loving Father. To the unprepared soul the words of our text come with dread and terrible sound. To the soul resting sweetly in the Saviour's cleansing blood and saving power, the words sound as Heaven-sent music, stirring to more Christ-likeness day by day. Dr. F. B. Meyer says: "Each morning, when we stand ready for the duties of the day, we hear the voice: 'Prepare to meet Me.' Each Lord's Day we wake with this same summons in our heart, and prepare ourselves to meet our God. Each illness, each fluttering of the canvas of our mortality, each premonition of our end, takes up the same appeal: 'Prepare to meet God.' And as we hear the words we have no dread, no fear. Clothed in Christ's perfect righteousness, arrayed in His beauty, we know that we are accepted; that the love wherewith the Father loves the Son is waiting to greet us.

"But there should be a preparedness of heart. We should not rush heedlessly into His presence. We should stimulate our hearts by thoughts like those suggested in the following verse. Stop and remember how great God is: He formed the mountains. How subtle His power: He made the viewless wind, and the Spirit, of which it is the emblem. How omniscient His knowledge: He can declare unto man His inmost thought. How absolute His authority: The brightest morning will darken, or the darkest night brighten, as He bids. How vast the circuit of His providence, who steps from Alpine peak to peak. Let me not rush into His presence. He is my Father. But He is the Lord, the God of Hosts. I must order my thoughts, and prepare to meet Him."

IN HOUSEKEEPERS' REALM.

A Variety of Suggestions Regarding Matters in the Culinary Department.

Black bass with sweet peppers is an excellent summer dish. Split the bass, have the backbone removed, season with pepper and salt, sprinkle with melted butter, and broil. When serving have ready some sliced sweet Spanish peppers fried in oil, and with these garnish the fish.

When buttering pans, Dario molds, cake tins, or anything which requires greasing, use a small, flat bristle paint brush. It costs ten cents, and if kept clean will last for years, says the Boston Budget.

Cold soda biscuits can be dipped quickly in water and heated through, or they may be sliced thinly, toasted crisply and served with coffee. Cold muffins are good split and toasted. Cold Johnnycake, sliced thin, makes a sweet, crisp toast for breakfast.

Do not throw away the salt left in the ice cream pail after freezing. Pour it into a colander and shake the water from it and leave it there till it dries, then return to the bag to be used again. You will be surprised to find nearly a pint of salt saved after the freezing of a couple of quarts of cream.

If you have no fat at hand in which to fry croquettes, roll them pyramid shaped, set them on their broad base in a baking pan, pour a tablespoon of melted butter over each one and bake in a hot oven till crisp and brown. It will take from 10 to 15 minutes to cook them.

Iced peaches appropriately begin a hot weather luncheon. The peaches are not to be frozen, but kept on the ice after they are halved, peeled and sprinkled with sugar, until they are thoroughly chilled. A small spoonful of whipped cream may be served with them if that combination is liked.

As a change from the tomato sauce usually served with breaded lamb chops, try an onion sauce made in this way: Slice two, or if very small, three onions, and cook them in water for a few moments and drain. Put them into just enough boiling water to cover, and add a little salt, and cook until tender. Cook together two tablespoonfuls each of flour and butter, and when perfectly smooth add one-half pint stock, three or four tablespoonfuls of cream, and one saltspoonful each of salt and sugar and a dash of cayenne. When the onion is tender press it through a colander and add the water in which it has cooked.

TO HAVE LIGHT MUFFINS.

A Recipe from the Collection of One Who Is Noted for Her Excellence in Making Them.

As much depends on the way in which the ingredients are put together as on the recipe itself. A housekeeper who is known for her fluffy breakfast muffins, which are always as light as the proverbial feather, uses sour milk in making them, but decries the old-time way of using it, says the New York Tribune. According to traditional processes, the soda is mixed with the sour milk before the flour is added. This method, says the housewife in question, allows the effervescence to be over before the flour goes in. Her way is to mix with the sour milk the flour, salt and sugar and then to add the soda dissolved in a little hot water. By this means the entire mass rises. The last thing before the latter is turned into the pans, a beaten egg is folded in. This is her recipe: Two cupfuls of flour, one cupful of sour milk, a half teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of sugar, a half teaspoonful of salt and one egg.

With all the multitude of helps provided in these days for the young housewife, experience is still the best teacher, and without it a surety of success is impossible. In the matter of sour milk, for example—it is delicious to cook with if it is at just the right degree of sourness, but only one wise from familiarity with it knows when that point has been reached, and no one can give the amateur a hard and fast rule to follow. That the soda must be proportioned to the acidity of the milk is an infallible rule, but it leaves much to the imagination.

Peach Fritters.

One cup of sweet milk, two cupfuls of flour, two eggs, one teaspoonful of baking powder, a pinch of salt, and one tablespoonful of white sugar. Sift the baking powder, sugar and salt with the flour. Heat the milk, add it slowly to the beaten yolks, mix in the flour and stiffly whipped whites, stir well, add two cupfuls of thinly sliced peaches, drop from a spoon into boiling fat, and fry to a pale brown. Drain on brown paper, roll in granulated sugar, and serve with lemon sauce.—Home Magazine.

Canape Sauce.

Rub the yolks of three hard-boiled eggs very fine add one tablespoonful of butter, stir until creamy; then add six canned anchovy fillets, mashed fine; one tablespoonful finechopped capers; one tablespoonful tarragon vinegar; one teaspoonful lemon juice; one teaspoonful English mixed mustard. Dip a sprig of parsley into the boiling water, then chop it fine, add half a teaspoonful of parsley to the sauce.—Ledger Monthly.

Doing It Proper.

The reporter was interviewing the western millionaire. "Is it true that you are going to endow a chair in that university?" "Endow a chair?" he thundered; "why, b'gosh, I can give a whole set o' furniture, an' I'll do it too. Say that in yer paper! There ain't nothin' cheap about me."—Baltimore Herald.

Pretty Gowns for the Early Fall Season.

Summer holidays, which promise to run well into the second week in September before they give way to autumn gayeties and gowns, promise to go out in a glorious setting. The late summer and early fall costumes are even more brilliant than were the earlier ones, though as a rule they are not so expensive. Simple muslins in grays and whites are showing themselves as extreme favorites for the most charming afternoon and garden party gowns imaginable.

Muslin and silk is an odd combination, but it is one at which modistes have arrived. Embroidered muslin and poppy red taffetas piped with white are united with surprisingly good effect in a new costume. The new design is a flounced afternoon gown which is displayed on a pretty brunette model. The skirt is simply a series of shaped flounces which are longer in front than in the back. Each flounce is strapped with the red and white silk. The bodice has a peculiar bolero—one that tapers below the waist to give a long and narrow basqued effect. The jacket is surrounded by a single band of the strapping and is cut short and square over a blouse of lace and muslin. The sleeves are raised on the shoulders, giving the first hint that we may again see a modification of the puff. The silk is slashed open down the forearms and permits undersleeves of plaited muslin to display their very voluminous folds.

Silk lawn is one of the most charming materials for garden party frocks. It is soft and light and so exactly suited for a slender, graceful figure! Pale blue is just the tint for a blond. A silk foundation is necessary when this material is used, for it is so thin and pliable that it is impossible to make a skirt take on a fashionable flare about the lower part unless some supporting fabric is placed underneath it. Two flounces headed by lace insertions and edged by lace make a pleasing skirt trimming for the pale blue silk lawn frock. Narrow plaits on the hips will give the skirt the correct shape. The bloused bodice should be fastened in the back and quite plain in front except for two vertical applications of lace insertion. If desired, a few rows of narrow pisiting may be put around the neck. A deep lace collar over the shoulders matched by the vandyked cuffs upon the wrists makes a pretty decoration. A ribbon belt is all that is needed to complete this dainty robe.

Hip Yokes the Feature of Fall Skirts.

Something of a novelty, at which women look admiringly but doubtfully, is the veil of opalescent hues. For gowns delicate, misty rainbow colors are indescribably lovely, so why not find a place for this novelty among milady's veils?

Chantilly laces in both black and white are very charming for afternoon veils, and, besides, they are so costly that they will never become common.

French women like to wear fine meshed veils to just cover the tip of the nose, and naturally we are not slow to follow their lead. However, not many women find the style really becoming, for it requires features bordering on the Grecian type to make the short veil truly successful.

Hip yokes are the striking feature of the autumn skirts. To women blessed (?) with stout figures this will be pleasing news, for there is nothing so becoming to such a figure as the hip yoke. It gives a form of chicness to such a woman that she can get by no other arrangement, yet the style is so striking that it must be fashionable if it is to be worn at all. It is not one of those little details that Dame Fashion leaves to individual tastes. Hip yokes are either fashionable or they are not. There is no half way point of the wear or not wear as you please kind.

We had hip yokes in our modes of last spring. Then they were tiny affairs comparatively, which dropped but a few inches from the waist line, and scarcely ever exceeded six inches in depth. The modes of the fall call for something different. Many of the hip, or skirt yokes, as they are now being called, reach half way to the knee, and below the skirt spreads out in a charming fulness of gathers and tucks.

But while hip yokes are becoming to the stout person they also give a far better figure when shirred or elaborately tucked to the very thin woman. So it is that two distinct types of femininity may be pleased with this fall fashion.

The fall materials will be of the thin, clinging kind, and these are essentially adapted to the making of skirt yokes. In fact, many of them on the model gowns are of lace, liberally covered with applique, or ornamented with rows of insertion. Variety in effect may be secured by having the yoke cut deeper in front than at the back. One of the fall models in particular that attracted my attention was a figured foulard with strips of pisin taffeta set in the yoke. The same effect was used to excellent advantage in the bodice.

ELLEN OSMONDE.

A BENEFIT TO FARMERS.

Consolidation of Harvester Plants Means the Continuation of Low Prices to Buyers.

The benefits that will undoubtedly result to farmers from the recent incorporation of the International Harvester Company, which took over the business of the five leading harvester manufacturers have probably not been considered by a large portion of the farming community.

The economical necessity of a consolidation of the interests of manufacturers and those of their farmer customers must be apparent to any one who understands the present situation.

The increased and increasing cost of material, manufacturing and selling—the latter in consequence of extreme and bitter competition between manufacturers and their several selling agents—has made the business unprofitable.

The two alternatives left for the manufacturers were either the increasing of the prices of machines or the reduction of the cost of manufacture and sales. The latter could only be accomplished by concentrating the business in one company.

As can readily be seen, the forming of the new company was not a stock jobbing operation, but a centering of mutual interests. There is no watered stock; the capitalization is conservative and represented by actual and tangible assets. There is no stock offered to the public, it having all been subscribed and paid for by the manufacturers and their associations.

The management of the International Harvester Company is in the hands of well-known, experienced men.

The officers are: President, Cyrus H. McCormick; Chairman Executive Committee, Charles Deering; Chairman Finance Committee, George W. Perkins; Vice-Presidents, Harold F. McCormick, James Deering, Wm. H. Jones and John J. Glessner; Secretary and Treasurer, Richard F. Howe. The members of the Board of Directors are as follows: Cyrus Bentley, William Deering, Charles Deering, James Deering, Eldridge M. Fowler, E. H. Gary, John J. Glessner, Richard F. Howe, Abram M. Hyatt, William H. Jones, Cyrus H. McCormick, Harold F. McCormick, George W. Perkins, Norman B. Ream, Leslie N. Ward, Paul D. Cravath.

The International Harvester Company owns five of the largest harvester plants in existence. The Champion, Deering, McCormick, Milwaukee and Plano—plants that have been producing nearly or quite 90 per cent. of the harvesting machines of the world.

It also owns timber and coal lands, blast furnaces and a steel plant; it has a new factory in process of construction in Canada.

It is believed that the cost of producing grain, grass and corn harvesting machines will be so reduced that the present low prices can be continued, and that consequently the results cannot be otherwise than beneficial to the farmer. To maintain the present prices of these machines means to continue and increase the development of the agriculture of the world, for no one cause has contributed or can contribute more to this development than the cheapness of machines for harvesting grains.

PROPHECY OF GLADSTONE.

One That the Grand Old Man Made Many Years Ago Which Has Come True.

Prophecies, even when the prophets are politicians, sometimes come true, says the St. James Gazette. Here is a notable Gladstone utterance which we can now look back upon as quite prophetic. Speaking or writing 25 years ago of the "menace which, in the prospective development of her resources, America offers to the commercial pre-eminence of England," the grand old man predicted that America, and America alone, "can, and probably will, wrest from us that commercial primacy. We have no title, I have no inclination, to murmur at the prospect. If she acquires it, she will make the acquisition by the right of the strongest; but, in this instance, the strongest means the best. She will probably become what we are now, the head servant in the great household of the world, the employer of all employed; because her service will be the most and ablest. We have no more title against her than Venice, Genoa or Holland has had against us."

Draw for Partners.

Parisian hostesses have invented a new method of dealing with one of the principal difficulties incident to dinner parties—that of pairing off the guests. On arriving in the drawing-room the guests find two baskets of flowers. Hidden in the blossoms are numbered tickets. The men are requested to shut their eyes, put a hand into one basket, adorned with forget-me-nots or some other blue flower, and pull out a card. The ladies perform a like ceremony, drawing their tickets from a bower of pink blossoms, generally roses. The corresponding numbers then look for each other, and, having sorted themselves out, pair off and go in to dinner.

Great Britain is Small.

Great Britain is only half as big as Sumatra, and double the size of Newfoundland. It stands fifth in point of size in the list of the world's islands. England, without Wales, is almost identical in point of size with Roumania. It is less than one-quarter as big as France or Germany. The whole British Isles occupy only one-sixteenth part of the surface of the globe.

REVISION OF THE TARIFF.

A Question That is Causing the Republicans No End of Worry and Trouble.

The question of a revision of the tariff is causing considerable anxiety to the republican leaders. The speech of Representative Grosvenor at the convention which nominated him was on both sides of the question. He favored revision of the tariff when the "proper time" came, and, of course, only Grosvenor and the republican party were capable of undertaking the revising. The Washington correspondent of the Boston Transcript, a sturdy republican newspaper, says of this:

"Mr. Grosvenor did not say when the 'proper time' for tariff revision would arrive, but it is well known that he fully agrees with the other republican leaders of the house that there probably will be no revision in which the house which is to be elected this fall will share. When, therefore, republican politicians commend Mr. Grosvenor's remarks, they mean that the men who rule the republican party have not the slightest intention that the tariff shall be disturbed until they are compelled to revise it.

"Nobody here regards with any seriousness the recent declarations of Senator Cullom, Representative Tawney and other republican members of congress in favor of tariff reform. There are others who say the republican 'tariff reformer' do not wish to be taken seriously by anybody outside their constituencies. They are tariff reformers of the Babcock variety, but whether they are sincere or not, there is not the slightest reason apparent to Washington politicians for expecting that any considerable movement for tariff revision will be developed in the republican party next winter. Secretary Shaw, for example, thinks the republicans of Iowa should not have made the declarations which embarrass the party at large. He says they knew quite as well as he that the tariff is going to 'stay put' for several years to come, unless the republicans get tremendously shaken up in the fall elections, and in that way scared into making some revisions."

The tariff protected trusts evidently have too firm a grasp on the leaders of the republican party to permit any of the tariff subsidy they are now receiving to be disturbed. This is the attitude of the leaders. But what of the people who pay the tax? Will they vote for members of congress or for members of the legislatures, who will select one-third of the members of the United States senate at the election this fall, who will continue the tariff tax on trust productions.

The opportunity to turn down the politicians, who secretly, if not openly, favor the tariff subsidy to the trusts is in the hands of the voters. They can enforce the Hanna-Grosvenor plan of letting well enough alone or they can vote for those who are pledged to lift the tariff burden of double prices on many of the necessaries of life which the "letting well enough alone" programme compels them to pay. In deciding this question, it is well to remember that the trusts are now selling their productions in this country for nearly double what they sell them for in other countries.

New Buster of Trusts.

Senator Hanna having failed with his Civic Federation annex to adjust the coal strike and President Roosevelt having pocketed the report of Commissioner of Labor Wright, which was heralded as giving the inside facts about the coal trust, so that it would seem that the president is not anxious to put any more labor on the overworked attorney general the coal strike is still in full blast. But now comes Brother Quay, who is stated to be very pleased to undertake what Hanna and Roosevelt have failed to accomplish, and being such a noted trust hunter he may accomplish it. Brother Quay, like his enemy Hanna, hunts the trusts to their lair to fry the fat out of them, and it may be cheaper for the coal trusts to stop the strike than to "put up" for the Pennsylvania campaign fund. It is about time for Brother Hanna to make another effort or Quay will be looked to as the adjuster of the troubles between labor and capital.

Hanna Can't See Trusts.

Senator Hanna shocked the country on October 21, 1899, by saying: "I do not know of a trust in the United States." On Friday, August 8, another similar Hanna shock was felt when he announced, at Chautauqua: "There are no monopolies in this country, except such as are protected by patents." Tom Johnson says that Senator Hanna's intentions are good and that he undoubtedly wants to help labor all he can; in fact, will devote the rest of his life to labor's cause, but says the senator will never accomplish much of permanent good until he recognizes the monopoly element in trusts and combinations and destroyes it. But if Hanna couldn't tell a trust or monopoly if he saw it coming up the street, his case is hopeless. He will continue to waste his time and good intentions while trusts and monopolies prey upon consumers, including his much-beloved workingman. Too bad!

——Regulation of trusts and abolition of monopoly involve difficulties which have perplexed statesmen and philosophers greater than Senator Hanna, and as he gets deeper into the subject he will perhaps be disappointed as well as surprised to discover that arbitration of labor disputes, excellent as it is in itself, is no solution of the industrial problem, but at the best only partial palliative of surface symptoms of the world's most serious malady.—Philadelphia North American.

——Day by day the trusts tighten their grip upon the throat of the republican party, and he is a dull one indeed who believes for a moment that the party can ever extricate itself from the clutches of the monopolies it has created. In fact, it has no desire to if the trusts will keep producing campaign boodle.—St. Paul Globe.

FALSEHOOD OF REPUBLICANS.

The republicans in official and unofficial documents and everywhere, in fact, have been boasting at the very high prices at which our two per cent. bonds sell, or, in other words, at the very low rate of interest at which this government can borrow money as compared with other nations. Thus, in their campaign text-book, the republicans say: "Uncle Sam is the only one on earth who can borrow money at two per cent. and the bonds be at a premium at that."

A half truth is always the meanest kind of a lie, because it is difficult to disprove. It is not only unfair to compare our bonds with the bonds of most other nations, but it is absolutely false to state that Uncle Sam can borrow money at two per cent. and have the bonds sell at a premium.

1. The bonds of Great Britain, and of some other European countries, are subject to income and perhaps are exempt from any and all kinds of taxation.

2. A direct comparison between the price of our two per cent. bonds and the government bonds of Great Britain and France is unfair because the price of our bonds is unduly enhanced by the artificial demand created by our federal banking laws, which require national banks to own these bonds and deposit them with the United States treasurer. This enhances the price of all our bonds.

3. But in the case of our two per cents, there is a further artificial stimulus or special privilege in the provision that the tax on national bank notes secured by these bonds shall be one-half of one per cent. less than the tax on notes secured by all other classes of bonds. This makes these bonds, for purposes of national banks, practically 2½ per cent. bonds as compared with all the other issues. The government pays only two per cent. outright, but, so far as the bonds are held as the basis of bank currency (and most of them are so held) it pays another half per cent. in remission of taxation on the bank currency. This explains why the two per cent. bonds sell so much higher in proportion than the three, four or five per cent. bonds. The four per cent. bonds of 1925 now sell for about 133, and the twos for about 108. This is on the basis of about 2.15 per cent. interest for fours and 1.75 for the twos. If, however, the so-called twos are considered as 2½ per cent. bonds, as may be properly done, they will be found to be selling on the basis of about 2.12 per cent. interest.

Virtually, then, the United States pays indirectly a premium on bonds of one-half of one per cent. to the holders of two per cent. bonds. If it would raise this premium to 2¼ per cent. it could borrow money without interest. If it would make the premium five per cent. it could receive interest on its own debts, and its creditors would be bidding against each other for the privilege of owning Uncle Sam money, just as waiters in restaurants, where tips are numerous and large, pay the proprietor for the privilege of serving his guests.

All of our government bonds enjoy special privileges, and our two per cents are more favored than the others. If all privileges were taken away from our bonds, they would probably sell so as to yield a net income of about 2.25 per cent. That is, the government could issue 2¼ per cent. bonds and sell them at par. It cannot, then, borrow money at two per cent. on ordinary bonds and sell them at par, and the statement in the campaign book is false.

POINTS AND OPINIONS.

——Republican senators and congressmen are too late in learning that the American people demand a revision of the tariff. The record of the Fifty-seventh congress in its first session makes it certain that the task of tariff revision will be intrusted to the democratic party.—St. Louis Republic.

——Indorsing republicanism is not indorsing tariff revision or reciprocity with Cuba. The republican party is too close a prisoner of the trusts successfully to approach either of these subjects. A democratic majority in the next house of representatives is the surest guaranty of both reciprocity with Cuba and a proper revision of the tariff.—Utica Observer.

——Republican leaders are more concerned over national affairs now than they had been in some years. So long as the democrats manifested indifference to the tariff there was no danger, but now that tariff reform and the regulation of trusts are being forced to the front the democratic party looks formidable once more.—Kansas City Star.

——One of the workings of the present tariff that is not perhaps understood by the American consumer is the rebate that is allowed our manufacturers for goods exported, thus: An American wool manufacturer must pay an exorbitant duty on wool. Of course, he adds this to his price of carpets and cloth and the American consumer pays it. But if the manufacturer exports his carpets and cloth the government refunds to him the duty that he has paid on the wool that goes into those goods. Thus the tariff discriminates in the case of foreign purchasers against our own people.—Indianapolis News.

HE REMOVES THE BODY.

The Stage Villain Does a Little Bit of Original Work at a Critical Moment.

Many scenes "not down on the bills" are enacted on the stage of the theater and some of them are ludicrous in the extreme. One night in a sensational drama Mr. Sparling, an English actor, who considers himself a stage manager from the wings. But the dead man was far too conscientious and realistic to play so vile a trick upon Dramatic Art—with both its capitals—and so laid placid and stiff. (As Mr. Sparling afterward explained to the stage manager: "Dead men don't pull in their legs.")

The curtain might have been up now had it not been for the presence of mind of the "heavy man," who previously done the deed, for he walked across the stage in a couple of strides—in spite of having already made good his final escape from justice—and, contemplating the body for a moment with arms folded and one leg forward, after the fashion of the cardboard brigands of old, exclaimed: "Ha, ha! he is dead! But now to remove the body higher up, that suspicion may not rest on me!" Whereupon he tugged the murdered mariner up the stage a couple of yards—at the same time looking up to see that the curtain would clear the corpse's feet—and once more fled from the scene of the tragedy.

The Chicago & Alton Railway has established an Employment Bureau, the purpose of which is to recruit employes from among the people living along the line of the Alton Road. The head of the Bureau meets citizens living in towns upon and adjacent to the line of the Alton Railway for the purpose of getting in touch with young men of good habits and high character who would like to become employes.

Students in telegraph offices, clerks in various departments, operators, brakemen, firemen, etc., are recruited from persons whose record is kept by the Alton's Employment Bureau, the selections being made from those who are best suited and qualified after having passed mental and physical examinations which have been made a part of the requirements for employment.

The Man and His Theory.

Once upon a time a theorist believed that he had a plan for making large profits in a short time on a small investment. He took a few friends and their money into his confidence and explained his theory to them.

Their joint fortunes went into a pool that was to pay 400 per cent. profit in three months.

One day there came a report that startled the stockholders. Their theory of profits had gone to smash, carrying their money with it, and hurling them all into bankruptcy.

Moral—Theories are likely to explode, with terrible consequences.—N. Y. Herald.

Good Openers.

"George certainly has very strong hands," said his mother-in-law grudgingly, as she watched him unscrew the top from a can of preserves which had stubbornly withstood his young wife's efforts.

"Hasn't he, though?" cried his young bride, admiringly. "Now I know what he meant when he spoke in his sleep last night about having such a beautiful pair of openers."—Gentleman's Magazine.

His Good Position.

"So you ran across Dingbat in New York, did you? Has he a good position there?"

"He had when I saw him last. He was sitting in a hammock with the daughter of a big banker."—Baltimore Sun.

LUDLOW.—Farmers are taking advantage of the two weeks suspension of the vehicle license ordinance, and the town has a lively appearance. The business people are happy now as the streets are no longer deserted and are being worn out for the benefit of the town. The citizens are guessing what council will do Thursday night. Some who pretend to know say that the license ordinance will be enforced with more vigor, after that meeting, than ever before. The business men have made arrangements to fight the ordinance in the courts.

Roy Dunham has been very sick, but is getting better.

The Ludlow Lumber Co., made an assignment last Saturday, to W. C. Hall, of Covington.

The Board of Education met at the public school house, Monday evening, and made final arrangements for the opening of the schools on the 8th inst.

Quite a number of our citizens attended the Florence fair and were very much pleased, especially Mr. Lahman, of the Globe Tea Co., who said he saw more pretty girls in one day than he had seen in a year before, and is thinking very seriously of trying to persuade one of them to make her future home in Ludlow.

UNION.—Mrs J. J. Garrison is at Corinth, Kentucky, visiting Mrs. J. W. Taliaferro.

Mrs Tom Brown and daughter returned to their home in Newport, Saturday.

Rev. La Bach, of Crittenden, preached for the Presbyterian congregation Sunday night.

John Poindexter and wife, of Cynthiana, and Mrs Oscar Huey of Carrollton, spent the past week with Mrs. J. W. Kennedy.

Mrs. James Dopelly, Friday night, entertained Misses Lizzie and Emma Cleek and Marion Johnson, of Beaver, and Miss Stella Meyers, of this city.

Miss Nannie D. Bristow and mother went to Covington, Saturday, to attend the funeral of Albert Baker. The remains were interred in Highland cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. James S. Asbury and daughter, Maud, of Mason county, came to the fair Saturday. They staid till Monday to join a merry party at the Zoo that day.

Dr. Robert Cochran and sister, Mrs. Nannie Corbin, of Madison, Ind., Mr. and Mrs. Ben Collins, Mrs. Dudley Gaines, of Texas, all former residents of this place, attended the fair and were heartily welcomed by their old friends.

COMMISSARY.—Lucien Ryle and family returned to their home near Greensburg, Ind., the first of the week. He is well pleased with the country where he is living.

Some corn and tobacco have been cut.

Jack Walton says he could have easily won the fat man's riding prize with old Jule.

Henry Parsons is putting a new roof on his saw and grist mill. Tom Marshall is helping him.

Ben Cason and Andrew Acra landed some very nice bass over on Woolper, last Thursday. They get them every time they go after them.

The carpenters have completed Mr. Lillard's new barns, and there is not a farmer in the county who is provided with more and better barn room.

Asa Beach, Rolen McCarty, and their families, and a large number of other friends broke bread and ate watermelons with Richard Louden and family, last Sunday.

A crowd met at the Commissary a few days ago and cut a bee tree in the corner of the woods near by. All the honey found could have been put in a pint cup, and Jack Walton did not get to use the half dozen biscuits he had in his pockets.

Parties went from here on Saturday, to the fair, thinking that was the day for the baby show. Had the show been on that day instead of Friday they would have made it interesting for somebody's baby.

Your correspondent attended the fair on Saturday and had the pleasure of shaking hands with several old friends but did not make the acquaintance of a single correspondent of the Recorder—did not meet any of those with whom I am acquainted.

I have been informed that I have, recently, failed to get some items of interest. It is impossible for me to hear everything, so follow my suggestion made some time since to send in your items and nothing will be left out. I will be glad to help you.

BEAVERLICK, Sept. 1.—Born August 30, to L. Jones and wife, a bouncing boy.

Mrs. Mary Noell and Mrs. Minnie Jump and family spent last Saturday with Mrs. F. D. Grubbs.

William Smith of Hillsborrough, O., spent a couple of nights with Deputy Sheriff B. B. Hume during the fair.

Beaver, although she seldom boasts of her fine stock, succeeded in capturing several strings at Florence fair, last week.

Robert Howlett and wife, of Greencastle, Ind., and Mrs. Leona Conley of Newport, were visiting John Conley the past week.

J. L. Jones, president of the Beaver and Big Bone pike co., is putting the road in fine coudition, hauling macadam and gravel where the road needs them.

Henry Maxwell, who was living on the farm of R. E. Moore, having become disatisfied, pulled up last week and moved to Walnutlick, Gallatin county.

Robert Stone, our efficient mail carrier, is supplying his patrons along the route with choice fish at present, which is furnished him by the old Hamilton fisherman, William Huff.

Everybody, their children and hired help, attended the Florence fair last week, and are busy engaged this week telling the home folks what they saw, heard and thought about the whole affair.

Beaver organized a base ball club last Sunday afternoon, and after a trial game discovered she possesses talent that would do credit to any of the National League clubs, especially the Cincinnati team.

The drought, though of short duration to date, has done serious damage to the crops in this section. Springs that seldom, or never failed before, have dried up completely this spell, which makes stock water scarce and difficult to get.

Found, on Lexington pike between Florence and Richwood, Saturday afternoon, a pocketbook containing a small sum of money. Owner can get the same by appying to Miss Maggie Carr, at Beaver, and proving property and paying for this advertisement.

IDLEWILD.—Glad to report all the sick as better.

Miss Mattie Winston is visiting her brother in Chicago.

One of our best citizens, Owen Allen will move to Petersburg, soon.

Mrs. F. P. Walton, of Covington, was a pleasant guest of friends here a few days ago.

Mrs. J. Frank Grant, of Baltimore, Md., who is visiting her relatives here, was at church, Sunday.

The meeting at Petersburg was well attended. Only a few ministers were present. Rev. Swindler preached in the morning, and Revs. Sproles and Kirtley in the afternoon.

MOUNDFIELD FARM, Sept. 1.—Rev. Slater began a series of meetings at Hebron, Sunday night.

John Rucker is having several hundred feet of cement walks put down.

Doc Mannin sowed several acres of Sorghum for his stock the coming winter, and he is now offering $100 for information how to harvest it.

I appreciate the kindness of editor in sending me a complimentary ticket to the fair, but, owing to the press of business I could not use it. I will save it for next year.

Dr. Frank Sayre is rusticating up in Michigan where he went a few weeks ago to escape hay fever. Cary Robinson, of Constance, who went with him has returned, delighted with his trip.

Mrs. W. L. Riddell will entertain the Christian Endeavor next Friday evening. All are invited.

Rev. Martin L. Aylor will preach at Woolper school house next Sunday at 10 a m, and on the 4th Sunday Elder Beemon, of Ohio, will preach at Gunpowder, which occasion will be a basket meeting.

Revival services commence in Burlington Baptist church Sunday night. The services of Evangelist Theo. N. Compton has been secured for that meeting. The subject for sermon will be upon "The Deaconship." It is desired that all members of the church be present.

In another place will be found Malchus Souther's announcement as a candidate for reelection as secretary of the Farmers' Insurance Company of this county. He bases his claim for a reelection on the efficient service he has rendered the company during his present term, and the further fact that it is customary to give a faithful officer a second term.

Loca News.

Fall pastures are in bad shape.

The crop of dust, last week, was abundant.

Considerable tobacco has been cut and housed.

Grange Field Day is the next to claim the attention of the public.

This is the month when oysters are ripe and will be in season until next May.

This part of the country has developed droughts until they have become monotonous.

Notwithstanding the fair is past there are yet several places to go in the immediate future.

The sowing of wheat will begin in a few days. About an [illegible] acreage will be seeded this fall.

The juveniles in many of the districts are now wending their way schoolward every morning.

The mill at Normansville is now ready to receive wheat and do custom grinding. A. L. Miller.

The Burlington man was found last week inside the fair ground at nearly every place where any cash was coming in.

Much of the corn has been greatly damaged by the hot, dry weather of the past two weeks, especially the late corn.

The Boone County Harvest Home is a week from next Saturday, and a large attendance and a good show is certain.

Grange Field Day at Harvest Home grounds next Saturday, will be a big day, and a great many people are expected to be there.

The First Annual Convention of the Boone Co. Churches of Christ convenes at the Court-house to-morrow (Thursday) at 9 o'clock a. m.

Sam Lancaster, of Beaver, threatened to use his knife on a fellowman a few evenings since, and now he languishes in castle Adams, making a quorum in that institution.

Pomona Grange Field Day at Harvest Home grounds next Saturday promises to be an interesting occasion, and a large attendance is anticipated. Good music and eloquent speakers will entertain the crowd most Handsomely.

The death of John M. Moody, of Bellevue, which occurred last Thursday morning after an illness of only a few days, is deplored by his numerous friends here. He was a good neighbor and citizen, and his sons and daughters have the sympathy of all in the death of their father. Obituary next week.

We neglected, last week, to mention the appearance of the Walton Graded School advertisement. The people of Walton are striving to have as good a school as this part of the State affords, and with that in view the trustees have installed an able corps of teachers, and invite the patronage of those who desire their children to have the advantage of a good school.

Not Doomed For Life.

Old Aunt Malinda Huey, colored, who until about a month ago, lived with the Carpenters about a mile north of town, died at the home of her daughter in Cincinnati, Saturday, Aug. 23d, of Bronchitis resulting from a cold, after an illness of but three days. Aunt "Liny" as she was called by everybody, was a good old darkey and had been quite active until about a month or so ago, when her daughter came out and took her to her home in the city, where she could look after her. It is said by some that aunt "Liny" was over a hundred years old.

A Parson's Noble Act.

"I want all the world to know," writes Rev. C. J. Budlong, of Ashaway, R. I., "what a thoroughly good and reliable medicine I found in Electric Bitters. Electric Bitters are the surprise of all for their wonderful work in Liver, Kidney and Stomach troubles. Don't fail to try them. Only 50cts Satisfaction is guaranteed by W. F. McKim, Burlington; Union Drug Store Union; J. G. Oelsner, Florence; H. L. Eskew, Walton; O. N. Grant, Grant.

The Fair in Paragraphs.

There was no disorder during the four days.

Quite a good Owen county delegation was in attendance.

Dave Ulz. of Kansas, came in to see his people, and attend the fair.

Lee Crouch, of Carroll county, was a successful exhibitor of horses.

The privilege men collected in the coin by the quantity. They all made good money.

The attendance for the four days was at least as large as at any of the six preceding fairs.

It was awfully dusty all week, but that had no perceptible effect on the attendance.

Only one slight accident in the ring. A wheel ran off of Keith's vehicle while showing a horse.

J. G. Craddock, the venerable editor of the Paris Kentucky-Citizen was on hand on Saturday.

J. F. Blyth sold his premium saddle mare to a Mr. Conley, of Madison, Indiana, for $250.

The display in Floral Hall on Saturday was magnificent, said all. There was fine vegetables galore.

The large premiums brought fine horses from up the country, and these beauties are crowd makers.

Congressman Gooch, Judge Paynter and J. Waillard Mitchell, were among the distinguished visitors.

It is seldom that so many handsome young ladies are seen in a crowd as attended the fair each day.

Every premium except two small ones were paid before the treasurer left the grounds Saturday evening.

Mrs. Harry Blyth came over from Aurora and spent the week with Mrs. Dudley Rouse and attended the fair.

Robert Cochran, of Madison, Indiana, was present the last two days, meeting many of his old friends.

C. N. Cropper, of Louisville, made his annual summer visit to Boone just at the time to do the big fair.

Hubert Marshall and J. K. Corbin, of Aurora, and Chas. Voshell, of Sparta, Ind., enjoyed the fair a few days.

Only ten of the Recorder's correspondents passed through the gates. Sorry that they could not all attend.

Wm. Furry, of New Palistine, Ind., was judge on cattle and sheep, and he had some very extra stock to pass upon.

The fair was a success from start to finish, the exhibition being a little slow only on the afternoon of the second day.

Mrs. Laura Martin and Clem Kendall came up from Lakeland to visit their relatives and take in the big fair, last week.

Julius Rouse and family of Payne's Depot, Scott county, attended the fair and visited their relatives in the county.

The pair of handsome blacks driven as the double team fancy turnout, are colts of Albert Conner's fine stallion, McLedger.

Albert Evans, of St. Louis, Mo., made a very satisfactory judge on horses. He worked hard and had many decisions that were hard to make.

E. A. Tucker, secretary of the old fair was present on Friday. There has not been a particle of change in him. The same pleasant gentleman of old.

W. J. Rouse, editor of the Monroe City, Mo., Democrat, was at the fair on Friday and Saturday. He publishes one of the best local papers in his state.

Several of the good people from Rising Sun and vicinity took in the fair on Saturday, among them Mr. and Mrs. John M. Pate and W. C. Steele and Mr. Anderson.

Col. Milton Hamilton, of Georgetown, was in Burlington a few hours one day last week. He does not visit the scenes of his triumphs early in life very often, and his visits are short.

John Clore, of Crawfordsville, Indiana; S. W. Carpenter, of Delhi, and Brack Whitlock, of Seketan, Ohio, Boone county productions, came over and met their army of Kentucky friends.

L. K. Conner, private secretary of Congressman Gilbert, of the Eighth Kentucky District. was the guest of A. B. Ronse, last week, and took in the fair. He is said to be the best politician in his district.

Judge Evans prohibited the reckless driving that was an exciting feature of the fair the past few years. He did not consider it necessary to drive a horse to death to prove its points as a harness animal.

Battie Long, of Richwood, told the Recorder at the fair, last week, that he had a field of corn that was planted early, and although the cutworms worked on it strong as it came up, it will make 10 barrels to the acre.

Benjamin Collins, of Texarkana, Texas., was at the fair on Saturday, renewing old and making new acquaintances. Time has dealt kindly with him, and his numerous old time friends here were glad to clasp hands with him once more.

The fat man's riding created more enthusiasm than anyother ring during the week. Chas. A. Gaines, of Idlewild, was a 100 to 1 favorite and won hands down. When the second tie was put on Charles Garnett, of Limaburg, he was so surprised that his breath failed him for some time.

As J. Wash Watts and Steve Helms were coming from the fair on Thursday evening the horse attached to their buggy caught a shoe coming down the hill from Jerry Beemon's and tell, breaking a buggy shaft and blockading travel for some little while before the horse could be gotten on its feet. No serious injury resulted.

On his way home from the fair on Wednesday afternoon W. P. Cropper struck the horse he was driving, with a whip, when the animal began kicking, and before it could be gotten under control it had demolished the dashboard, broken off the shafts and wrecked one wheel, besides turning the buggy over. Mr. Cropper and his daughter escaped injury, but they had a close call.

One of the shafts on the buggy driven by Waller Marshall's daughter and her friend, Miss Portwood, of Waterloo, dropped as they were going down the hill to Limaburg, Saturday morning. The horse began running and Miss Marshall jumped out of the buggy. Miss Portwood remained in the vehicle until it was turned over, when at Limaburg the horse turned out the Anderson ferry road, when she was thrown out but not hurt. At that point the huggy was demolished. Mr. Marshall chanced to be near at hand, and took the girls in his two horse wagon, and after stacking up the fragments of the vehicle he went on to the fair, leaving word for some one to take care of the horse should any person bring it back, which was done some time during the day.

Judge Lassing is in New York on business.

J. J. Rucker is looking after his business interest at Nashville, Tenn.

Atty. J. C. Clore was in town last Monday, fresh from a recuperating tour through Michigan.

Mrs. J. J. Griffith (nee Finch), of Muscatine, Iowa, is visiting her Kentucky relatives and friends.

Good rain in the northern part of the county Monnay morning. In some places creeks almost too high to ford.

The little 6 months old daughter of Thomas Castleman, of Florence, died Monday night. Burial to day at 10 a. m.

Thos. Rouse's son, Ira, who has a position in a grocery over at Walnut Hills, came over, last week, to visit his parents and do the fair.

All farmer's are especially invited to be present at the Grange Picnic at Harvest Home grounds next Saturday, to hear the speaking and see what the Grange offers for relief from the distressed condition this class is in.

Ten to nine in favor of Bullittsville, was the way the score read last Monday at the close of the game between Burlington and Bullittsville. Neither team did any brilliant playing—especially the home team. Had Erlanger faced the Burlington aggregation that day revenge in great big chunks would have been theirs.

James Bristow, of Union, had rather a remarkable experience one evening last week, after returning home from the fair. He wanted to consult his ticker to ascertain the time, and was surprised to find the works missing from the case. How the works got out of the case and what had become of them was a mystery to James, who knew that he had not looked upon the wine when it was red, during the day. A few hours later, though James was still more surprised when he ran his hand into his pant's pocket to get a chew of long green and got his fingers tangled in a combination of wheels, which when brought forth proved to be the running gear of his time peace, in a perfect state of preservation, and running as though it was in the proper place. As to how and when the works were transferred from the case in his vest pocket to his pants pocket Jim is thoroughly ignorant.

Our good Lord, in His allwise providence called our beloved sister, Nettie Hoard, July 26th, 1902, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Aid Society of South Fork Christian church has lost a true and faithful member, and her two little girls a kind and loving mother, which will be most keenly felt by them, as their father preceded her to that better world several years.

Resolved, That her long, quiet and useful relations with the members of our Aid Society be kept in fond remembrance by them and they extend their sympathy to the bereaved family.

She was one among the first in every good work our church undertook, not only a member of our Aid Society, but one among the first membership of the C. W. B. M. Therefore her loss will be keenly felt by both. Be it our prayer that the blessing of a Divine Father rest upon the two little orphan girls and sustain the father, brothers and sisters of our departed sister.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Boone County Recorder and the Warsaw Independent for publication, and also be placed on minutes of our record, and same be presented to family.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucus surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

THE NEW RIVER FIELD.

The Second Regiment Arrives at Thurmond, W. Va.

Probably 500 Shots Were Fired Across New River Between Strikers and Guards—No One Was Seriously Injured.

Thurmond, W. Va., Aug. 29.—Everything was quiet in the New river coal field Thursday night, and has been quiet throughout the day save a little skirmish at Caperton in which 20 or more shots were fired, but no one injured. The entire 2d regiment state troops arrived here Thursday evening and Thursday night and are being distributed about various coal operations where on Wednesday trouble resulted. Three companies of militia will be stationed at Rush Run, two miles west, where on Wednesday probably 500 shots were fired across New river between strikers and guards. The strikers opened fire on non-union men going to work and the guards returned the fire. None of the guards were injured and so far as known no strikers were seriously hurt. The strikers gathered in the woodlands and rocky cliffs on the opposite side of New river from Rush Run mines and kept up a continual fire throughout the day. This led to the militia being ordered out.

Sheriff Daniel thinks that more serious trouble will soon follow. He says the strikers are becoming more determined and that it was absolutely impossible for him to cope with the situation. Almost everything in the coal operation line on the Kanawha and New rivers are being operated on a small scale. In these fields probably 2,000 miners are at work and 6,000 or 8,000 are idle. Considerable property has already been destroyed and it is believed that the sending of troops will tend to enrage the strikers more than ever and bloodshed may soon result. The operators are determined, and state emphatically that they have no intention of conceding to a single demand made by the strikers.

New York, Aug. 29.—Not only in New York, but in every important city in the union mass meetings will be held, a demonstration such as has never been known in the United States. The result will be an immense petition addressed to President Roosevelt, signed by 2,000,000 hardy sons of toil, asking the chief executive to call a special session of congress to devise legislation to end the most bitter struggle between labor and capital the nation has known for years. The idea of having a gigantic mass meeting arose with the delegates to the Central Federated Union of New York. It was instantly picked up by the officers of the American Federation of Labor, which sent out requests at once to every union in the country affiliated with the central body, to arrange for a demonstration and mass meeting on Labor day. No similar action was ever taken in this country.

A FIGHT TO THE FINISH.

There Is No Immediate Prospect of a Settlement of the Coal Strike.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 29.—The officials at strike headquarters have settled down to the belief that there is no immediate prospect of an early settlement of the strike. While President Mitchell would not say anything himself, some of his subordinates have been of the opinion that the return of J. P. Morgan to this country would bring a change in the situation favorable to the miners. The developments of the last few days, however, have entirely dispelled this view and now all that is heard is: "It is a fight to the finish."

STRIKE BREAKERS.

Twenty-Five Molders Quit Work Because Colored Men Were Employed.

Lebanon, Pa., Aug. 28.—The 60 colored strike breakers brought here from Reading were put to work Wednesday in the plant of the American Iron and Steel Co. here without opposition from those on strike, though trouble was feared. Immediately thereafter 25 molders employed by the company quit because they would not work with the colored men.

Three Victims of a Tragedy.

New York, Aug. 28.—Lizzie Hall, 26 years old, and Joseph Campbell are dead and an unknown man is dying in Bellevue hospital as the result, the police say, of a quarrel in the woman's apartments in East Twenty-fifth street Wednesday. According to the police, the two men entered the apartments and the quarrel ensued, during which four shots were fired.

Bodies of the Fairs Are Still in Paris.

Paris, Aug. 28.—The bodies of Chas. L. Fair and wife, who were killed in an automobile accident, are still here. Nothing can be learned as to the date on which they are to be shipped to New York.

Reached a Settlement.

TWO VESSELS COLLIDE.

Steamer Liguria Run Down By the Steamship Peconic.

New York, Aug. 28.—In broad daylight and bright sunshine a collision which might have resulted in a dreadful calamity occurred in New York harbor Wednesday afternoon between an incoming passenger liner and an outbound freight steamer.

The steamship Liguria, of the Italian Royal Mail Steamship Co., with over 1,100 persons on board, was run down in the narrows by the British steamer Peconic, of the Mediterranean and New York Steamship Co., bound out for ports in the Mediterranean. A succession of whistle blasts, just how blown could not be learned, was followed by a tremendous crash and the Peconic's bow smashed into the hull of the Liguria, just forward of the foremast. The Italian's hull was cut to the water's edge and water poured into the aperture [illegible] Peconic as she drifted away scraped the white hull of the Liguria and carried away the companion ladder. The bow of the Peconic on the port side was stove in and the stem turned to starboard.

On board the liner all was confusion for a few minutes but Capt. Montano restored order promptly and forced the steerage passengers over to the starboard side in order to bring the hole cut by the Peconic above the water. This effort was so successful that very little water entered the liner.

The pilot who brought the Liguria into port, Frank Kramer, was little disposed to talk, but said that the fault was all with the Peconic. He said the Liguria was coming along slowly towards the narrows. The Peconic and the British steamer Antilla, bound for Nassau, were steaming to sea a short distance apart when the Peconic blew two whistles and then changed the signals. The Liguria sheered to starboard and then back at full speed. The impact came with terrific force, the sound being heard on the shore.

The Peconic was so damaged that she returned for repairs. The Liguria after the inspection of passengers at quarantine proceeded to her dock.

On board the Italian liner were 21 saloon, 29 second cabin and 965 steerage passengers. Among the saloon passengers was Father Rodriguez, general of the Augustinians. He was met at quarantine by Father Murphy, of the Augustinian monastery at Tompkinsville, Staten Island. He will proceed directly to Washington.

There were no casualties on board the Liguria or on the Peconic. The latter vessel was in charge of Pilot Charles Thompson and was deeply laden.

His majesty has intimated through the United States embassy that he will be pleased to receive the American generals in audience at an early date, but the time is not specified, doubtless because the emperor is occupied in entertaining the king of Italy.

AN URGENT APPEAL.

Public Alliance Asks President Roosevelt to End Coal Strike.

They Hoped the Matter Would Be Settled on J. P. Morgan's Return, But He Declines to Make Concessions or Arbitrate.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 30.—The public alliance of this city which has been endeavoring to bring about a settlement of the coal strike in the interests of the business men of the anthracite region has sent the following appeal to President Roosevelt:

"To the President of the United States: Since the inception of the barbarous and senseless struggle in the anthracite coal region, we, the non-combatants who stand upon neutral ground, have suffered the inevitable fate of such unfortunates. The tide of battle ebbs and flows over and above us. We have endured patiently. We have petitioned humbly. We had hoped for much upon J. P. Morgan's return. But now, after a struggle of four months' duration, a period of suffering and progressive business paralysis when it seemed to us that the time was propitious for a settlement of some kind, if not a matter of concession to public opinion, yet as a plain business proposition, Mr. Morgan has met with his henchmen and the edict has gone forth: 'There will be no settlement, no arbitration, no conciliation, no mediation, no concessions. The fight must go on.'

"Mr. Morgan has placed a bar upon us which means universal ruin, destitution, riot and bloodshed.

"Is J. P. Morgan greater than the people? Is he mightier than the government? Will be be permitted to retain this menacing power?

"It is time that the people should speak. It is time that their voice should be heard.

"Representing the interests and sentiment of nine-tenths of our people, we appeal to you to use your influence to stay the judgment, which crushes us. Encouraged by your recent utterances, relying upon your judgment and patriotism, confident of your moral courage, we appeal from the king of the trusts to the president of the people.

(Signed)

"THE PUBLIC ALLIANCE.
"T. F. HART, Chairman."

President Mitchell said Friday that there were no negotiations on for a settlement of the strike so far as he knew. Mr. Mitchell will leave here Saturday for Atlantic City and will spend Sunday at the sea shore. On Monday he will go to Philadelphia and deliver the principal address at the Labor day meeting.

Philadelphia, Aug. 30.—Having exhausted every other means for preserving peace and in protecting the non-union men from violence on their way to and from the mines, Brig. Gen. Gobin, in command of the troops now in the coal fields, issued an order that the soldiers shall shoot any persons detected in throwing stones or other missiles, and that if any mob resist the authority of the troops they shall use their bayonets and rifle butts. The Panther Creek valley has been in almost continual turmoil this week and the troops stationed there have had a difficult time in protecting the lives of workmen. Friday night the situation in that valley improved considerably, and it is hoped by the military authorities that the lawlessness and abusive language directed toward the soldiers will now cease. The other sections of the coal regions are comparatively quiet.

The general strike situation remains unchanged. There is some coal being shipped but the quantity is so small compared with the normal shipment that it has little or no effect on the market. The fuel now coming to market is principally washery and loose coal.

MONROEISM SPEECH.

Roosevelt's Address Causes Widespread Attention in Vienna.

Vienna, Aug. 28.—President Roosevelt's speech on Monroeism has caused widespread attention here. The Neue Freie Presse thinks it was directed chiefly against Great Britain and that it sounds like an answer to the conference of the colonial premiers. The paper believes it will make a deep impression on Great Britain, which country may find herself faced by the prospect of war over Canada with a mighty foe, with which the South African states can not be compared.

"Mr. Roosevelt," continues the paper, "waves his bony fist against England because the Boer war published to the world the poverty of Great Britain's military forces." The paper concludes as follows: "It must not be forgotten that Mr. Roosevelt's fanfare was sounded in an election speech in such a manner one might anticipate war in the near future. But American election speeches are only judgeable from an American standpoint."

The Neues Wiener Tageblatt says: "The speech is a forecast of the platform for the next campaign and is not intended as a warning to Europe, though it comes just at the right time, when the European governments are considering a renewal of their commercial treaties."

APOSTOLIC DELEGATE.

Mgr. Guidi Appointed to That Position in the Philippines.

Rome, Aug. 29.—Mgr. Guidi has been appointed apostolic delegate in the Philippines.

The vatican professes not to attach much importance to the movement and declares it "can not develop under the leadership of persons whose sole reason for organization is because they are excommunicated from the Catholic church."

THE MOCK WAR IS ON.

"Hostilities" Between the Army and Navy Opened.

Never in History of This Country Has Such Grim Aspect Been Given to Defense Which Guards the New England Coast.

Newport, R. I., Sept. 1.—Under cover of fog and the blackness of night, the North Atlantic fleet, commanded by Rr. Adm. Higginson, slipped its cable in Menemsha Bight, Vineyard sound, shortly before 10 o'clock Sunday night and put to sea, making the first move anoat in the war game between army and navy in the imaginary along the southern New England coast. On land from Fort Rodman, at Bedford, to Fort Wright, at Fisher's Island, every fortification is manned by artillerymen and every head land is patrolled by signal men just as carefully as if a real hostile fleet were about to descend upon this part of the seaboard.

The actual war period began at the expiration of 48 hours of preparation, and while they appeared to take things easily during that interval, the land forces under supreme command of Maj. Gen. MacArthur were drilled at the guns and at a signal station with all the vigor that forecasts real conflict.

Never in the history of this country has such a grim aspect been given to the defenses which guard New Bedford, the cities on Narragansett bay, the Connecticut shore, and, more important even, the city of New York, from attack under cover of Martha's Vineyard and adjacent islands and through the great waterway—Long Island sound.

Sunday night when taps sounded at all the forts nearly 5,000 artillerymen went to step beside their guns ready to spring up for action when the alarm sounded. The walls of the fortifications were paced by guards and along the beaches sharp eyed signalmen swept the sea with their glasses feverishly anxious lest the light of a hostile war vessel be taken for that of a friendly merchant craft.

On sea the fleet had been swallowed up in darkness and it will be heard from next when it makes a descent on the coast within the zone of hostilities. There are nearly 5,000 men afloat and it may be that Adm. Higginson will endeavor to land his marines at some exposed point of the shore defenses and attempt to capture it before making his attack in an effort to force an entrance to Buzzard's or Narragansett bay or Long Island sound, or even to silence some one of the big forts. The army says it is ready for anything which may develop, but anticipating an early landing party from the fleet at Gay Head, the signal station there was moved to higher grounds to avoid being rushed by marines. To cripple the army line of communication may be Adm. Higginson's first thought, in order to use his marines. The first point of attack is looked for at Fort Rodman, manned by volunteer artillerymen, but there may occur only a reconnaisance by the gunboats while the great battleships swing into action to the westward and by skilful maneuvering, theoretically hammer the fortifications to a mass of ruins with their ponderous turret rifles.

THE "BIG GLORY."

MURDER AT MONROE, MICH.

Joseph Labarge Chased By a Mob and Shot Dead.

Monroe, Mich., Aug. 30.—Walter Lemerand, lately from Toledo, came home and found a man, a Frenchman, in the house with his wife. A quarrel ensued, the unknown finally running from the house. An officer attempted to arrest him when he ran down Third street and a crowd pursued. The cry, "assaulter," was raised and the mob began to shoot. The unknown ran into a cornfield where he was surrounded and shot dead, a bullet penetrating his heart.

The woman denies that there was any assault. An inquest is being held. The two men whose shots killed the victim are known.

Mrs. Lamerand told the sheriff that the dead man is Joseph Labarge, 319 Cherry street, Toledo. She says that she and Labarge had planned an elopement.

The dust is still falling, although lightly, but during the night of the 30th the quantity of the dust which fell here will be greater than upon any previous occasion since the first eruption of Mont Pelee. At nightfall of the 30th a dark cone-shaped cloud, emitting electric flashes, rose in the south, but it gradually was obscured by the mist caused by the falling ashes. Rumbling noises and a few detonations were heard during the night of the 30th. The people here are quiet. No news has yet reached here from Martinique.

Point a Pitrie, Island of Gaudeloupe, Sept. 1.—This entire port has been covered with a cloud of fine dust since 5 o'clock Sunday morning and the populace is panic-stricken. Fine ashes are falling continually in a slight drizzle. Semi-darkness is over the sea and the ships in the harbor seem to be enveloped in a cloud of smoke.

The train was running at a high rate of speed and the first mail car followed the locomotive into the ditch and was badly splintered. The mail clerks escaped with but slight injuries. The passenger coaches and sleepers left the track, but did not turn over, and beyond a severe shaking up none of the occupants were hurt. The track was blocked until late Sunday night. The bodies of the dead trainmen were extricated from the wreckage and taken to Eau Claire on a special train.

CARLISLE GRAHAM'S FEAT.

He Swam From Whirlpool Through the Lower Rapids.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Sept. 1.—Carlisle D. Graham swam from the whirlpool below Niagara Falls through the lower rapids to Lewiston Sunday. Graham made a better swim than he did September 9, 1901, when Maude Willard attempted to navigate the upper rapids in Graham's barrel and was suffocated. Graham Sunday wore a life preserver about his waist and a neck float. The swift running current whirled the swimmer to the center of the stream and for nearly half an hour Graham battled with the waves. As far as the Devil's Hole it appeared comparatively easy for Graham and then he plunged into rough water that many times hid him from sight. Only once, however, was he in danger. A current suddenly tossed him toward the shore dangerously near a big boulder that showed threateningly above the surface. By desperate swimming he just avoided the rock and was carried on down stream. Below the Devil's Hole where the river narrows Graham had another hard battle. For a time he was completely hidden from view and the hundreds of spectators on the bridge and along the banks were greatly excited. Graham soon appeared in the smoother water where the river widens. He declined to enter a boat and swam to the shore just below the new trolley bridge.

Philadelphia Central Labor Union's Resolutions Condemn His Order.

Philadelphia, Sept. 1.—The Central Labor union of Philadelphia, at its regular meeting Sunday, unanimously adopted a resolution denouncing Brig. Gen. J. P. S. Gobin, in command of the troops now on duty in the anthracite coal fields, for issuing an order calling on his men to shoot strikers if they resist the authority of the troops. The resolutions set forth that it is illegal for the general to issue an order to "Kill citizens of Pennsylvania who are guaranteed trials by jury for any offense they may commit." The resolutions request Gov. Stone to revoke the commission of Gen. Gobin and the civil authorities is asked to have the general indicted and tried for "Threatening the lives of citizens of the state of Pennsylvania."

The secretary of the union was instructed by the union to send a letter of protest to Gov. Stone for the alleged breaking of a promise that he is said to have made to these anthracite district presidents to the effect that he would not permit the state troops to escort non-union men to and from the mines. It is claimed that the governor made this promise to Presidents Nicholls, Duffy and Fahy on the occasion of their visit to Harrisburg in May.

SYMPATHIZE WITH STRIKERS.

Soldiers Persaude Miners at Work to Join in the Strike.

Parkersburg, W. Va., Sept. 1.—An unexpected situation has resulted from the ordering out of the national guard to preserve order in the coal fields. The soldiers, whose sympathy was all with the strikers from the start, have used their influence with the men who are at work and have persuaded so many of them to join in the strike that the detachment stationed at Rush Run had to be recalled and sent to another point to keep it from emptying the mine.

Hundreds of families were sleeping Sunday night under the skies for cover and with only the shelter of the skies for protection. It is estimated that over a thousand families have been evicted in the New River valley and most of them had no place to go.

STOCK SUFFERING.

Many Are Dying For Want of Feed and Water in Oregon.

Burns, Ore., Sept. 1.—There never has been a time in the history of Harney county when stock has suffered so much for food and water as during the present summer. The hot weather in the last six months has dried the grass in the hills and the springs and small creeks have been fenced up. In several places cattle are dying for want of feed and water.

A CIGARETTE STUMP.

It Was the Cause of a Disastrous Prairie Fire in Oklahoma.

Guthrie, Okla., Sept. 1.—A prairie fire in the vicinity of Marlow, near the Oklahoma boundary, raged 12 hours Sunday, destroying everything in its path. Farmers and stockmen, more than a hundred strong, fought the flames, which when night came, were finally stopped by counterfires. One hundred and fifty tons of hay and several fields of growing corn were consumed. A strong north wind gave the fire great headway. It originated from a cigarette stump.

Condemn Bullet-Proof Shields.

Washington, Sept. 1.—The United States army ordnance officers, after an exhaustive test, have reported against the adoption of bullet-proof cloth shields. The test showed that weight for weight, the shields were not as resistant as steel plate.

Coal Yard Syndicate.

Chicago, Sept. 1.—The consolidation of 300 small coal yards in Chicago is contemplated by an eastern syndicate. Several thousand retail coal dealers, from the "basket" merchants up, will be forced out of business.

STATE NEWS HAPPENINGS.

WOMAN'S AWFUL DEED.

She Killed Her Mother and Sister, Fired the House and Suicided.

Covington, Ky., Aug. 29.—The disorder brain of a woman was responsible for one of the most atrocious crimes in the history of Kenton county, Kentucky, Thursday afternoon.

Murder was her mania, and she succeeded in killing one person, seriously wounding another, and then committed suicide.

At 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon the residents of Sanfordtown, a small settlement on the Madison pike, about four miles from Covington, were startled by cries of murder emanating from a cottage situated in the middle of a small cornfield. Before they had an opportunity to get together and make an investigation flames flashed from the house and cries for help could be heard coming from the building.

The whole populace was soon aroused, and gathered around the burning building. A door was broken open, and on a bed writhing in the agonies of death was Mrs. Margaret E. Bankhardt, aged 64, while near her was her daughter Dora trying to smother the flames. The house was burning rapidly, and men grabbed buckets and started to the cistern to try to save it. As the bucket was dropped it struck some object. This object was pulled to the surface a few minutes later and found to be Miss Emma Bankhardt, the demented daughter of Mrs. Bankhardt. She had struck her mother and sister Dora with some blunt instrument, set fire to the house and then jumped into the cistern. Before the men could rescue Mrs. Bankhardt she was burned to a crisp, and the daughter Dora was so badly burned about the face and arms it is doubtful if she can recover.

JOHN ERNEST'S SPREE.

Six Men Sat on the "Disturber" Till the Train Reached Louisville.

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 1.—John Ernest, who lives at Kilgore, near Ashland, Ky., arrived in Louisville on a Chesapeake & Ohio excursion train Sunday with six men sitting on him. Ernest had taken a good load of liquor aboard, and amused himself by trying to force everybody to leave the train that he might have it all to himself. He drove women in fright from one coach, and not a few men. Finally Ernest was seized, but was so violent, and fought so hard, that six men sat on him all the way to Louisville. On arrival here Ernest was brought to Central police station and put to sleep. By evening he had sobered up enough to be sent back home on the return of the excursion train.

THE MULLINS BOYS.

They Escape Jail at Middlesboro—One Was Recaptured.

Middlesboro, Ky., Sept. 1.—The Mullins boys, implicated in an assault on Miss Cora Wallis, in Virginia, have made a daring escape from jail. They overpowered the jailer when he came into their cell to give them food, leaving him senseless, then fled into the monntains. When their escape was discovered several men pursued and Henry Mullins was recaptured, but his two brothers made their escape. As they are without arms and in an unfriendly country it is believed they will soon be recaptured by the posse now on their trail.

After a Blue Grass Farm.

Lexington, Ky., Aug. 30.—Richard Steele, of Philadelphia, is here for the purpose of buying a blue grass farm. He is said to be representing President A. J. Cassat, of the Pennsylvania railroad. Cassat owns the ... and dam of Gold Heels and is said to have his eye on a large breeding establishment in this section. Steele has made offers for farms, but no deal has been closed.

The Entire Family Is Blind.

Inez, Ky., Sept. 1.—The entire family of Lincoln Mollet, consisting of himself, wife and three children, all totally blind, came here and applied for admission to the poor farm. Judge Howsley refused their application because they were non-residents of the county. The wife is a daughter of a prominent United Baptist minister of this county.

Kentucky Couples Married.

Fulton, Ky., Sept. 1.—Judge Roberts' matrimonial shop in South Felton, Tenn., was unusually busy Sunday. Will Etter and Lena Reutta, of Reedsville, Ky., were married. Next came J. W. Vaughn, of Dukedom, and Miss Azalia Bolton, of Fulton, and later J. M. James and Dena Morris, of Pierce, Ky.

Struck By a Train.

Leitchfield, Ky., Sept. 1.—A freight train of the I. C. road struck J. Wess Layman's surrey Sunday morning at a crossing, throwing Mr. Layman, his wife and children out. Mr. Layman was badly hurt, the others escaping serious injury.

Green Did Not Sell Lexington Track.

Lexington, Ky., Sept. 1.—Charles E. Green has wired a local newspaper here that he has not sold the Kentucky association race course to J. B. Haggin and will not sell it to him. This statement comes as a surprise.

KENTUCKY CAPITALISTS.

They Will Investigate the Gas Field Near Irvine.

Lexington, Ky., Aug. 30.—Judge Jas. H. Hazelrigg, of Frankfort; Judge M. C. Alford, of Lexington, and a party of Louisville, Lexington and Frankfort capitalists left here Friday for Estill county to investigate the merits of the natural gas field near Irvine. Four miles from the town gas has been found issuing from the earth in quantities sufficient for cooking, and for years the people there have built ovens in the sand and cooked with it. It is the intention of the capitalists to develop the territory, and, if it is found sufficient, to furnish Central Kentucky towns with natural gas. Ten thousand acres of land is already under lease by the promoters of the enterprise.

BITTEN BY A SNAKE.

Farmer's Foot and Leg Swelled to An Enormous Size.

Versailles, Ky., Aug. 29.—John L. Chapman, a farmer living near Oregon, this county, went out at night barefooted to turn a horse out of his yard. When he tried to climb a fence the movement of his right leg was impeded by a heavy weight dangling from his foot, which proved to be an immense snake.

For almost a minute he struggled with the reptile, which was lashing the fence with its tail, before he could get his foot released from its jaws. His foot and leg swelled to enormous size, and he has been confined to his room. The snake got away in the dark, and it is not known to what species it belonged.

HE WENT WRONG.

Trusted City Clerk of Dayton, Ky., Proved to Be a Defaulter.

Newport, Ky., Aug. 29.—C. B. Hayward, the trusted city clerk of Dayton, Ky., is a confessed defaulter as secretary of the Progressive Loan and Building association to the amount of $11,000, and the little city is consequently in the throes of intense excitement.

But this is not the extent of his defalcations according to well authenticated reports. He is short in his accounts as clerk of the city to the amount of several thousand dollars if the reports are true. He confessed to a shortage in the city's funds Thursday night, but would not state the amount.

WANTED IN LOUISVILLE.

A Committee Will Invite President Roosevelt to Visit That City.

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 30.—C. T. Ballard, a millionaire manufacturer of this city, and personal friend of President Roosevelt, will head a committee which will go east immediately upon the president's return from Chattanooga to invite the chief executive to visit Louisville. The president has, it is understood, already been invited by Gov. Beckham to visit the state and spend a part of one day at the Lexington trotting meeting in September, and Mr. Ballard hopes to prevail upon the executive to include Louisville in his itinerary.

THE STURGIS FARM.

J. Ed Corrigan the Chicago Horseman, Purchased It.

Lexington, Ky., Aug. 29.—J. Ed Corrigan, the Chicago horseman, has purchased Frank Sturgis' farm of 447 acres, three miles from this city. Price $100 an acre. The farm is near H. P. Headly's famous Beaumont farm. Corrigan will greatly improve the place and make it one of the finest stock farms in the blue grass, using it for both training and breeding purposes. He has recently made large purchases in yearlings, which will be quartered at the farm in the near future.

Objects to the Fight.

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 30.—The Law and Order league Friday commenced an agitation against the Corbett-McGovern fight. It has written letters to all the local papers asking them to object to having a thing take place in this city that other cities won't stand for.

Weeds, Hay and Stubbles Burning.

Key West, Ky., Sept. 1.—Acres of weeds, hay and stubble are on fire. Men are plowing furrows around the houses to make them safe. Wild game is running in droves. Farmers are driving cattle and other stock to points of safety. Fifty men are fighting the fire, which is believed is under control.

Drowned in the Miami.

Newport, Ky., Sept. 1.—Henry Schnitker, 21, was drowned while bathing in the Little Miami river at Turner's grove. He attended a picnic given by the Corwine Social club, and was bathing when overcome, and he sank in sight of several on shore.

No Anthracite Coal in Louisville.

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 1.—An advance in the price of anthracite coal from $8.25 to $9 a ton has been announced here. It is stated, however, that there is not a ton of anthracite in the local market at present.

State News.

Jake Graves, of Fayette county, sold 300 export cattle to Jonas Weil at 6¼c.

An owl measuring seven feet from tip to tip was recently killed near Barbourville.

Robert Spencer, aged 82 years, and Mrs. Nancy Cravans, aged 74, were married in McLean county.

Mrs. George Satterfield, of Trigg county, is the mother of eight children at the age of 28 years. She was married at 15.

At Dawson Springs five women, visitors at the Springs, were run down on a trestle by an Illinois Central freight train.

Henry Ellis, of Henry county, sold 27 lambs to A. L. Hill, of Shelbyville, that averaged 100 pounds, for $6.10 per hundred.

Belle Meade, the most famous of all American breeding farms, will pass into history in another week. Next year it would have celebrated its centennial.

B. F. Richardson, of Dubuque, Iowa, reports to the American Sheep Breeder the sale of the fleece from his $700 Angora buck, "Lazarous," at $1.00 per pound.

Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota are in the midst of the greatest harvest ever known. The cash realization from wheat, oats, flax and corn, which crop is full of promise, is placed at $189,-430,000. Barley will add $3,000,-000.

The corn crop in Owen County was never better. Any old field, however poor the soil, is bringing forth a bounteous yield. Tobacco is far better than the prospect warranted a few weeks ago. The farmers will have plenty of money if their products sell for anything like a fair price.—News-Herald.

The State statistician estimates the Indiana wheat crop this season at 40,000,000 bushels, as against 32 000,000 bushels last year. This estimate is based on reports of acreage from 40 counties, allowing 15 bushels to the acre as the average yield. He expresses the belief, however, that 15 bushels per acre is too low an estimate.

A number of farmers in Garrard are storing their wheat, and confidently express the belief that it will eventually bring them a dollar a bushel. The yield varies considerably in different parts of the county, the Paint Lick vicinity averages only five bushels per acre, while the lower Garrard grangers report from about fifteen to twenty bushels.—Danville Advocate.

Woodford farmers are interested in the outcome of Mr. John B. Seller's corn crop. Mr. Sellers, on the "Pepper farm" near Midway, is introducing in this county the Kansas method of raising corn. With a specially constructed machine, such as they use in the "Sunflower State." Mr. Seller broke up the ground and planted his corn at a single operation and instead of dropping several grains in a hill and having the labor of thinning, he planted in straight drills, one grain every twenty inches. The corn is worked, of course, only in one direction. The machine he used plants the corn deeper than the ordinary way and Mr. Sellers says it will suffer less from wind and will also yield at least 3 bu. more to the acre. Mr. Sellers has a crop of 175 acres and, with less plowing, it looks better than his neighbors' crops. Mr. Sellers also claims great economy in harvesting by the Kansas method. He will not cut his corn at all, but drive his wagon into the field, shuck the corn on the stalk and load it directly into the wagons.—Woodford Sun.

It is almost useless to caution the country to keep out of market with half fat, immature, light native cattle at this or any other season of the year. It is one of the unfortunate features of the trade that the countryman notes prices reported in the market papers and at once concludes that if anyone's cattle will bring the prices reported his are sure to get there. He sends them in not more than half fat and is sorely disappointed in the returns. Right now there is an unusual shortage of prime fat cattle; the call for that kind is strong and prices are high, with prospect for them remaining so for an indefinite time. There is so much difference between good, fat beeves and these underfat grades, and the general run of cattle prices so high that the buyers will let their orders go unfilled rather than take the green stuff at prices the country thinks it ought to be worth. This is the condition found prevailing right here at the opening of the range season. That these rangers are going to come in good beef condition has already been demonstrated. The [illegible] beef trade will prefer these [illegible] to the green, washy, half-[illegible], as they do almost every [illegible] and it is not at all unlikely [illegible] will see a more satisfactory [illegible] native cattle below [illegible] than at present, [illegible] and to coming [illegible] Stock World.

Death of H. A. Hicks.

Harvey Allen Hicks was born July 19th, 1830, and raised near Russell's Cave, Fayette county, Kentucky, died at his residence near Richwood, Boone county, Kentucky, August 18, 1902, aged 72 years, 1 month.

He came to Richwood, Boone county, Kentucky, in 1854, was married to Sallie J. Williams and settled on the Menzies farm, where he remained until his death. In 1888 his wife died, leaving no children. In 1870 he was married to Sallie S. Stamifer, daughter of the late Abraham Stamifer. To this union there were born five children, three of whom remain: Mrs. Lizzie Gaines, wife of Lee Gaines, Sam C. Hicks and Mrs. Sallie B Garrison, wife of Elzie Garrison

When Mr. Hicks came to Boone county he had only $1,000. He has bought and paid for 350 acres of the finest land in Boone county, much of which cost a high price. His judgment on fine stock was, perhaps, unsurpassed by any man in Kentucky, always buying the best and so treating it as to make it the best for market. The county has lost one of its best citizens, and farmers as well as financiers.

His funeral was conducted by L. Johnson, of Walton, at his late residence, and the remains were laid to rest in Richwood cemetery in the midst of an immense concourse of friends and relatives. To his wife and children the most tender sympathy is extended.

L. JOHNSON.

During the fair Miss Pearl Crisler, of Petersburg, got her grip, a suit case, exchanged for another, in which was a lady's dress, a gentleman's shirt and a little boy's waist. In hers was a black skirt, a white skirt, a gingham dress and some underwear. The exchange was made in some manner at Cahill's livery stable. She would be glad to exchange back.

The news reaches this office from Verona by telephone that while ex-County Judge Benjamin Stephens, of Florence, was attending the fair last Saturday, burglars gave his residence a thorough ransacking, unlocking every lock about the house, the interior of which looked like it had been visited by a cyclone that evenig when the Judge got home Three dollars in money was all that was missed.

There is more truth than poetry in the following from an exchange: Yonder is an old lady; her hair is quite gray, the snow of age has drifted through her one-time raven locks. She is hoeing in the garden, carrying on a war against the plague of weeds. Next Monday she will wash and on Tuesday she will iron. She has a grown daughter who is beating out the tune of "Just One Girl" on the piano; her mother is endeavoring to keep time with her hoe. The girl could hoe but she will not; she could take a fall out of the washtub, too, but she will not, she is too refined; she has the soul of an artist; but she couldn't sit down at a sewing machine and run up a seam on a calico apron to save her artistic soul from perdition. Yes, her mother will finish hoeing the onion patch in time to get dinner.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOL. XXVII. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1902. NO. 47.

County Correspondence.

WALTON, Sept. 8.—The Graded School will begin Monday, September 15th.

The common school in district No. 38 will commence Monday, Sept. 15th, in the Johnson school house.

J. Grant Tomlin has had a spacious coal house erected in the rear of his office adjoining Odd Fellows building.

Wm. Dudgeon, of Verona, paid a brief visit to our town the other day, looking as hale and hearty as he did years ago.

Mrs. Wm. Houston and family (including Bessie and Mary Jane) have taken a trip to Louisville to remain until very have had a good rest.

Edward Stamler has forwarded plans and specifications for a double house of five rooms each to Delvin S. Lermond at Paris, Ky., who will build this season.

There was quite a demand for houses to rent last week, caused no doubt, by the near opening of the Graded School. Wm. Moore, of South Fork rented O. W. Ronse's house on Main street near the corporation line, for a year.

Mrs. A. B. Tompkins, after a relapse caused by eating some corn, when her physician had forbidden her to do so, is some better. Everybody remembers Byron Northcutt, whose physician allowed to eat one oyster when he was fairly convalescent telling him if he ate more he would die. Byron thought he would die if he didn't eat more and watching his opportunity ate the whole can and had the hardest pull of his life to get over it.

Mrs. N. M. Northcutt came out last Thursday to see her father, E. P. Holder, who has been so very ill for some weeks. Her visit had a most salutary effect on Mr. Holder, as he improved from the time she came out and on Saturday came down in the spring wagon in town with a load of vegetables. Those who know the intense affection existing between the father and daughter have no hesitation in attributing the rapid improvement in health to the delight that flooded the soul of the father at his daughter being with him.

Harry Noell made a promiscuous railway tour thru Indiana. As usual he found no place to suit him like this. The he did not stay long at any place (only until the passengers and mails were taken on and put off) he was so anxious to get home that he became literally home sick. His health has been very much improved by the trip. Yet should excite no astonishment when it is considered that the journey lasted nearly two whole days and was going most of the time at the rate of 45 miles an hour.

On last Friday morning Messrs. L. D. Ogeen, of Danish, and W. L. Morgan, of Bail's Landing, all in the county of Owen, were held up, so to speak, for a half a day waiting for the afternoon train for Louisville. Their acquaintance had been made previously, as they were going on a prospecting tour through the eastern and southeastern part of the State in search of mineral lands. They are shrewd business men, and an hour's talk developed that they had been successful beyond even their most sanguine expectations. They were jubilant over the success of their trip, and upon their asking if their were no traces of mineral in Boone county were told that some time in the seventies there were vague rumors of how a man named Robbins thought he had discovered traces of silver and the report was that he were crazy digging for it. They were in no way daunted by the mention of Robbin's misfortune and before bidding us adieu they determined on going over the county if they could hear anything to justify them in coming up here in short time. They are interested in the lead mines on the Kentucky river, and if any one can give any information of the existence of lead or zinc they will come up and examine the country, and the Recorder will publish the time of their coming.

The Editor of the RECORDER ventured to Ludlow, Friday, to shake hands with old friends and get acquainted with new ones. Some of the business people who are opposed to vehicle license concluded to advertise in his paper.

George Washington Whippel, author, assayer of common metals, is writing a history of the seven wonders of the world. He expects to have the manuscript completed in a few weeks if he does not find another wonder in Ludlow.

First came Miss Flo and Mrs. Hugh Arnold, Mrs. Eugene Kelly, Misses Artie and Stella Ryle and selected a place in the shade of a large tree a few steps from my back door. I fixed up a place for them to make the soup, and the ladies soon had it cooking. Just at this point in the proceedings Ed Botts came and called me to one side, and said, "he had some chickens taken the night before, and asked who had bought chicken and if they were dressed." I could not answer his question, and informed the ladies of his suspicions, when Mrs. Kelly came forward and informed Mr. Botts that the chickens for the soup were Plymouth Rock, and that his chickens were all Leghorns. By the time the soup was done, or soon thereafter, all had arrived. ROBERT CLORE DEAD.

Died At His Home in Rabbit Hash from a Kick By a Horse.

Robert Clore, of Rabbit Hash, who was reported, last week, as badly hurt by a kick from a horse, died from his injuries at 5 p. m., last Friday. The interment took place last Sunday at Bellevue, in the presence of an immense concourse of relatives and friends. Robert Clore was a son of Michael Clore, of Bellevue, where he was born and raised and spent nearly all his life. He was about 40 years old. His wife was Miss Belle Huey, daughter of the late John Sam Huey and Mrs. Lamora Huey. To them were born six children, four of whom, all boys, are living the oldest being about 16 years old. Robert Clore was a good citizen and neighbor, a loving husband and a kind and indulgent father, and while his family are bowed in grief the sympathy of all who knew the departed is theirs.

The accident that resulted in Mr. Clore's death, was as follows: He was on his way home from Bellevue, riding one horse and leading another. Down at Solon Rice's some young mules were running, which fretted his horses, and he was thrown and kicked by the one he was riding, and rendered unconscious. He was carried to Mr. Rice's, and in an hour or two he recovered sufficiently to go on home. Reaching home a physician was called, who pronounced him seriously hurt. After a day or two he took a turn for the better and was thought to be improving up to the moment of his death. It is thought he was kicked on the stomach as well as on the side below the heart.

Text—"And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them."—Acts 14:27.

The Home-Coming.—How good it seems after being away from home to get back again amidst the old familiar scenes and faces; to fill our accustomed niche in the household activity, and to mingle again with the circle of acquaintances and to share with those given a place therein the experiences met with while sojourning elsewhere. What new attractions the home has, and how we settle back in the cozy corner or the "den," the home-like sitting-room or the seclusion of "our very own room," and enjoy a new sense of comfort and satisfaction in them, after the hustle and bustle of the journey; after the new scenes and surroundings and the strange faces, have passed in kaleidoscopic variety before our vision. Old Farmer John of my boyhood school reader expresses the thought exactly when he exclaims: "The best part of going away is getting home again." He has been off to the city encased in the boiled shirt and stiff collar, the Sunday suit and the new shoes which have not been broken to easy comfort as yet. As soon as he is in the house, he quickly crawls out of the irksome apparel and stretching his stiffened muscles, he gets into his easy-fitting work-a-day clothes. The bark of the dog, the neigh of the horse, the busy cluck of the chickens all greet him as he passes through the barn yard, and he is recognized in his familiar attire. The dog, which before had sedately borne himself in the august presence of the Sunday clothes, now leaps and bounds upon his master, who sensing the changed demeanor of the animal, declares: "With my new clothes off and my old clothes on, now I am myself," said Farmer John.

It is indeed good to go away, but there is a joy and satisfaction in getting home again which makes it the best part of the experience. The summer is nearly ended. The vacation season is about over. Many have been away from the home circle, from the church activities, from the business and social life, and have returned again to take up the real and earnest side of life. Those who have not been away and yet who have relaxed into summer-time ease, and have taken rest in lightened duties in the home, the business, the social and religious spheres, are beginning to tighten their grip on things and prepare for the larger activity of the fall and winter days. So that the thought and spirit met with on every hand is one of quickening activities and renewed zeal. The home-coming to the family circle is marked by the glad welcome back to the roof tree, the resumptive of active associations with the loved ones and the taking up of one's share of the burdens of the home.

The home-coming in the church life is in these days being more than ever before accentunted by special recognition of the return of the absent ones, of the ending of the vacation season and the taking up again of the work with renewed vigor along all lines. Rally day, with its special exercises and roll call, is becoming more general in the churches and Sunday schools of the land, and not only is it instrumental in bringing in many absentees—those who have drifted away—but it draws together in closer bonds of Christian love and fellowship the school and the church. It places the church and the Sunday school in better working condition, and emphasizes and advertises the school and church as an aggressive working force.

Rally Day at Antioch.—Our text introduces us to the great Rally Day inaugurated by Paul and Barnabas upon their return from the first missionary journey. You remember that Paul and Barnabas, after laboring for a year or more at Antioch, were sent out by the church for a work to which the Lord had called them. After an absence of nearly a year, during which time they have had some wonderful and blessed experiences, they return, and having "gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them." We do not know that the work in the church at Antioch had languished while they were carrying the Gospel message to other parts of the world, but we do know from our text that these two faithful servants of the Lord busied themselves immediately upon their return in gathering the church together in order that they might rehearse unto them the remarkable experiences through which they had passed and thus stimulate the home church to greater activity. What a thrilling and interesting recital that must have been. How it must have stirred the hearts of those in the meeting to hear of real live experiences under the leading and protection of the Lord. No sleepy, nodding heads in that assembly. No long, painful pauses. Nor tiresome repetitions of the same old testimonies which had been offered time and time again before. No preachery of fine sounding sentiments with every experience back of them. We [illegible] that it is to have these features in the prayer meeting and know too little of the Paul-Barnabas style of wide-awake meeting.

Do you know the reason why a returned missionary who talks of his work is always interesting? Not generally because he is a fluent talker or is finished in manner or speech, but because he comes to you with real life experiences and you realize that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is indeed the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.

That Rally Day in the church at Antioch was a memorable occasion, and undoubtedly stirred the life of the church to a degree that it had not known before. Probably there were some there who for the first time had borne in upon their souls the sense of their own obligations towards others and felt a special call to service. It is the spark that is struck from the flint which can set the tinder into a blaze, and not the flint or the piece of steel by itself. It is the lightning flash which spits out the ball of electrical fire, and not the thunder clap which rolls through the heavens. It is life in touch with life that quickens and produces results. It is real heart and life experiences which supply inspiration for the most stirring testimonies.

A Suggestion for Rally Day.—And if you want to make Rally Day in your church and Sunday school an occasion of great profit and blessing, and stir the meeting to its foundations, and stimulate to more and better work than ever before, cut out all the fine cut and dried speeches of welcome, all the fulsome praise, all the good promises to larger and better service, and get two or three or four, who have been about the Master's business during the summer and are all alive with His work, to tell their experiences. Pick your speakers carefully. Let your choice be determined not by fluency of speech and ease of manner, but by the fact that those who are to speak have had an experience in soul saving and are burning with a desire to tell it. Theories as to methods of work and exhortations to service are all well enough sometimes, but there is more power to the square inch in the Paul and Barnabas Rally Day methods than in all the theories and eloquent speeches you can crowd into the audience room of the meeting house. Try it and see.

The Need of Going Away.—In order to fully appreciate the thought of the Home Coming, let us go back of our text to the time of the departure of Paul and Barnabas from Antioch on their missionary journey. Undoubtedly there was a double purpose in the Lord's calling these two men to new fields of labor. First, the needs of others were greater than those of the church at Antioch, and second, the church at Antioch had reached a condition where it required the stimulus of the Home Coming. Your going away from home or your church ought to be marked by the same conditions or motives. You are going away or have been away? If it was in response to the call of God (and we ought never to go anywhere or do anything except He does call us and lead us), it was not at any sacrifice of real duty to home or church. If the Lord calls us away it is because we are no longer needed there, but have a mission to perform elsewhere, and because the time of separation ended and the mission performed, the home and the church needs the inspiration and blessing of the return home.

Christ said to His disciples: "It is expedient for you that I go away." Why? Because His going away meant His return in fuller measure in the person of the Holy Spirit. It was expedient for Paul and Barnabas to go away, not alone to carry a blessing to all the dark places they visited, but that they might return filled with experiences and lessons which would stir the church at Antioch and inspire to greater effort than ever before.

And not only was it needful for Paul and Barnabas to go away to carry the Gospel to others, but because they were absolutely not needed any longer at the church at Antioch and would have been in the way of the work of the Lord if they had remained. A great many parents tie themselves up in the home and a great many Christian workers tie themselves up in the church and Sunday school under the mistaken notion that the home or the work cannot survive their absence, when if the leading of the Lord were followed, they would go away for a season to be revived and quickened and returned home again to be a greater blessing than ever before. Philip was called from the great revival he had been instrumental in starting at Samaria out into the desert not alone because he was needed to preach the Gospel to the eunuch, but because he was no longer needed at Samaria, and perhaps would have spoiled a large part of the work he had accomplished had he remained. If there was a closer following of the leading of the Lord to-day there would be more journeys through the Asia Minors of the world's roads and less puttering over the Lord's work at the Antiochs; there would be more live experiences in the out of the way places, and more Home Comings to thrill the home and the church with new life and new power.

The Return.—It was not until the work to which they had been called had been fulfilled, as the verse before our text declares that Paul and Barnabas returned. They did not turn back at the first sign of opposition or upon experiencing the first hardship. They were driven out of Antioch in Pisidia, but it was only to go to Iconium and preach the Word. There a plot was hatched to kill them, but nothing daunted they fled to Lystra, to heal the impotent man. There Paul was stoned and nearly killed, but he was fighting the good fight of faith and cheerfully and gladly went back over the route he had come confirming the souls of the disciples. And it was not until all the work God had for them to do was accomplished, that they returned to the home church at Antioch. And if they had gone back any sooner there would have been some miserable hitch in the Rally Day arrangements and they never would have been able to gather all the church together.

The Reunion.—"And when they were come," they "gathered the church together." Paul and Barnabas didn't send back word they were coming, so that a grand public reception could be arranged in their honor. They were not looking for personal glory, and did not plan a dramatic entry, with popular applause and a glowing speech of praise and welcome from the chairman of the meeting. No, they came quietly into Antioch with no blowing of trumpets, and the first thing the church knew of their return was when Paul called upon this member and Barnabas on that. If you want to make your Rally Day a success get the returned teachers and members of the church out calling. Paul didn't wait to hear from the platform how the church was getting along. He knew that such public reports sounded well, but they were not altogether reliable. He wanted to learn the real condition of affairs, and he knew the surest way of doing it was to talk with the individual members. A pastor of a church, a superintendent of a Sunday school, a teacher or a class can secure more reliable information in regard to the conditions and needs of the church, the school or the class, by a little judicious calling than by a public report from every member of the church, the school or the class. I believe Paul had two reasons for gathering the church together. He wanted not only to make a report as to his missionary tour, but he wanted to make his report fit the needs of the church. The incidents he told were adapted to the peculiar conditions in the church. He told of the opposition of the Jews at Antioch to show how prejudice shut out the true light and led to destruction. He told of the despised Gentiles receiving the Gospel so as to make the proud and vainglorious realize that God is no respecter of persons. He drew the picture of the lame man at Lystra with such vividness as to quicken the sight of all the members of the church to the suffering of those about them. He referred to the first faint glimmering of faith in the mind of the poor cripple towards God which went reaching up, up, up, until it brought down the blessing of healing and sound feet, so as to encourage the weakest brother in the faith to understand how the love and care of God reaches to the lowest and the weakest and the most unfortunate, if there is the slenderest thread of faith down which the blessing can flow. He told how the popular acclaim which would have made of Paul and Barnabas gods and done sacrifice to them was soon turned to bitterest hate and violence, so as to show that the "heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." He perhaps turned the thoughts of the disciples back to Jerusalem, where the same multitude which had been praising Jesus and proclaiming Him King a few days before, were now hoarsely and madly crying for His blood, and impressed upon his hearers the fickleness of the moods of the people of the world, and that only he whose mind is stayed upon the Lord is kept in perfect peace.

Paul told of the stoning he suffered, too, but not with a superior ring in his voice, saying: "See how much more I have suffered for Christ's sake than you!" Not for the purpose of exciting sympathy for himself, but that he might again drive home to the hearts of his hearers that he who is not willing to take up his cross and follow Christ in suffering cannot be His disciple; that it is only as we suffer with Christ that we can also reign with him.

Paul "rehearsed all that God had done with them." Notice that Scripture does not say that they told all that they had done for the Lord. Paul and Barnabas take a back seat and exalt their Lord. All that God had done with them is the burden of their report. If we were less occupied with ourselves and more completely lost in desire to glorify and honor God there would be more power and inspiration in the reports we make respecting the Lord's work.

Get busy telling what God has done with you and quit telling about what the big ego (self) has done for God. Let the Rally Day reports observe this vital condition, let everything that is done and said be performed with the purpose of fitting a peculiar need of the church and Sunday school. Let no one be glorified and praised save God and His Christ and the most stimulating reunion you have ever had in your church or Sunday school will be the result and you will be surprised at the impetus which will be given the work. Let the Home Coming be filled with the thought of what God is and what you can be for Him in His hands. Let the prayer not be "Lord, see what I have accomplished for Thee while away," but:

"Lord, speak to me, that I may speak
In living echoes of Thy tone;
As Thou hast sought, so let me seek Thy erring children, lost and lone.

"O, lead me, Lord, that I may lead
The wandering and the wavering feet;
O feed me, Lord, that I may feed
Thy hungry ones with manna sweet.

"O strengthen me, that while I stand
Firm on the Rock and strong in Thee,
I may stretch out a loving hand
To wrestlers with the troubled sea.

"O, teach me, Lord, that I may teach
The precious things Thou dost impart;
And wing my words, that they may reach
The hidden depths of many a heart.

"O give Thine own sweet rest to me,
That I may speak with soothing power
A word in season, as from Thee,
To weary ones in needful hour.

"O fill me with Thy fullness, Lord,
Until my very heart o'erflow
In kindling thought and glowing word,
Thy love to tell, Thy praise to show.

"O, use me, Lord, use even me,
Just as Thou will, and when and where,
Until Thy blessed face I see,
Thy rest, Thy joy, Thy glory share."

Republicans Railing Upon All Who Are in Favor of a Revision of the Tariff.

An angry resentment of the popular demand for tariff revision is the most noticeable characteristic of republican comment thereon, making plain the truth that republican unwillingness to act against the monopolies enjoyed by the trusts unfits that party for service to the people.

The leading organs of republicanism stigmatize as "tariff-smashers" all those who are in favor of a revision of the tariff. The only variant of this favorite term in which they indulge is the second-choice epithet, "business-killers," which they employ hopefully as tending to deter voters from a conclusive insistence upon tariff revision. In their desperation they are preaching the doctrine that the maintenance of monopoly is necessary to the prosperity of the masses, says the St. Louis Republic.

The millions of Americans now bearing the tax burden of the Dingley tariff have passed that stage where they could be fooled by such tactics. They do not see "prosperity" in the fact that they are compelled to pay higher prices for the products of the American trusts than are paid by Europeans for the same products. They fail to feel "prosperous" merely because the cost of living in this country has been tremendously increased in order that the food trusts should make exorbitant profits and pay millions in dividends to a few multi-millionaire monopolists. They can only see and feel that the Dingley tariff is a mighty good thing for the trusts and a mighty bad thing for the people.

Nor is there any popular apprehension of American trade being injured by a revision of the tariff. American merchants and manufacturers are underselling their competitors in all the markets of the world. They are more than equal to holding their own in American markets. They can, without the slightest danger of loss, do without the "protection" of a tariff whose duties are necessarily paid by American consumers. They are very sure that business will be healthier when a healthy competition is possible and when individual enterprise and the conduct of smaller business concerns stand some show of profit. There is no prosperity for the people in the fact that a few hundred trust magnates, out of a population of nearly 80,000,000 souls, make fortunes every year and proceed to spend the bulk of those fortunes in foreign lands.

That form of "tariff-smashing" which would revise the Dingley tariff to the wholesome basis of a tariff for revenue only is heartily favored by American public sentiment. This sentiment is so strong, indeed, as to make tariff reform the leading issue of the day. Republican organs can no longer frighten American voters by calling them "tariff-smashers" and "business-killers." The only business to be killed is the monopoly business, and the only tariff to be smashed is the unjust Dingley tariff that has created and maintained the monopoly business at the sore cost of the people.

—Senator Hanna's declaration that there are no monopolies save those which are protected by patents invites research. Possibly he does not include the beef packing industry among monopolies, and perhaps, again, the proprietors of the slaughter-houses have found some means of copyrighting the cow. Senator Hanna's expressions of opinion on this subject have been frequent and consistent and no doubt are the result of investigations which go beyond the popular interpretation of the word "trust."—Bangor (Me.) AROUSING OF THE PEOPLE.

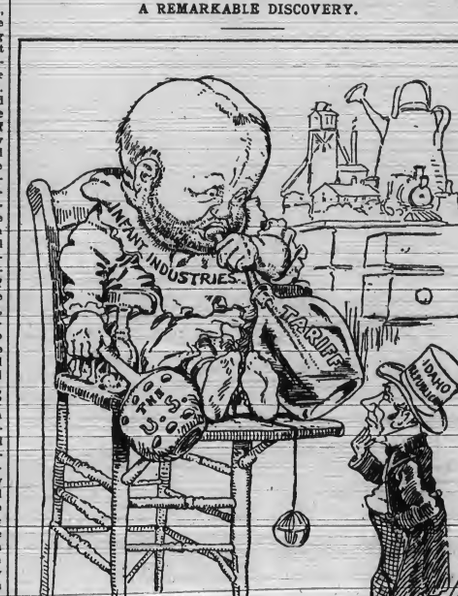
Tariff Reform is Being Demanded Even by Members of the Protection Party.

Whatever may be the outcome of the present tariff agitation such resolutions as were adopted in the Idaho republican state convention show conclusively what the rank and file of the people are thinking. Without serious opposition the convention declared:

"That many of the industries of this country have outgrown their infancy and the American manufacturer has entered the market of the world and is successfully competing with the manufacturers of all other countries. We therefore favor a revision of the tariff without unreasonable delay which will place upon the free list every article and product controlled by any monopoly and such other articles and products as are beyond the need of protection."



This is a stronger declaration than the one in the Iowa platform because it was written later. It is an exceptionally clear and straightforward expression of the real feelings of the people of the west, says the Des Moines Reporter and Leader (rep.).

Such resolutions as these are to be commended not only for their fearless frankness, but also because they indicate a popular interest in the public policies of the nation. It is right and proper that the people should in this connection exert an influence on party policies. This is a government of popular will, and there is no way for the men who represent the will of the people to know what it is excepting as it is stated in some concrete form by their constituents. Congressmen who attend these conventions, and who witness the enthusiasm with which these declarations are received, return to Washington with a better acquaintance with public sentiment and are in better position to act intelligently in behalf of their constituencies.

It will not do to minimize the fact that in states like Iowa and Minnesota and Idaho, which have recently spoken, the people propose to get at the trust evil in some effective manner, and that they propose to have such tariff schedules as are sheltering these trust combines removed. Those who witnessed the reception which this plank received at the hands of the Iowa convention had no doubt of the feelings of the delegates who adopted it. It was received with a greater demonstration of enthusiasm than any plank in the platform. After all the discussion that this Iowa plank has occasioned, Idaho republicans with deliberation adopted it in more clear cut and aggresive terms. The trend is unmistakable.

It is to be hoped that in every convention still to be held that the people will take a fearless hand in debating these great matters. The power lies with them, and their's is the right.

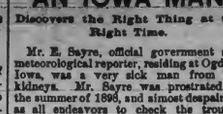
POLITICAL DRIFT.

—If we wait for an amendment to the constitution before we begin to control the trusts the trusts have nothing to fear.—Indianapolis News (Ind.).

—So the movement for freer trade spreads. We rejoice that it is so. If we can only have, at present, a democratic party capable of dealing with this great question, we may hope that the republican party as a whole will model itself after the pattern offered by the republicans of Iowa and Idaho. —Indianapolis News (Ind.).



—The exact position of republicans is that an unjust tariff is crying out for urgent revision. That they are the only ones who can do the work, and that they will do it just one day after never. This is the true tariff faith, which if any republican do not profess he shall without doubt everlastingly fail of getting a campaign fund.—N. Y. Post.

BLUNDERING COURTESY.

The Obliging Young Man Had Hair on His Head and Could Spare His Hat.

Excessive kindliness of heart, when allied to a blundering courtesy, is occasionally productive of an amusing incident. Of such is the following: A president in recent times of one of our royal colleges was noted for the possession of a trim little yacht, which he was fond of sailing in one of the reaches of the River Thames, says the Candid Friend. One day the president had the misfortune to capsize his craft, with the consequent result of complete immersion. He was immediately assisted ashore, and a change of clothing provided at an adjacent boathouse. This, however, did not include a hat of any description. The president, who is an old man and correspondingly bald, stood shivering, his scant hair uncomfortably stirred by the breeze. His plight was observed with respectful compassion by one of the students of the college who had witnessed the catastrophe, and offered his own headgear. The president, however, seemed reluctant to accept it, saying: "If I takes yours, what will you do?" "Oh, air," said the student, "it doesn't matter for me. I've got hair on my head." This statement was accepted as final by the president, together with the cap, and he laughed heartily at what, after all, was not wholly a one-sided joke, for the consideration of the student may be better imagined than described.

THEIR GENERAL ORDERS.

A Raw Recruit Who Had His Instructions Committed Letter Perfect.

A Washington boy son of a well-known official of the District government, is home for a brief visit from his station at Columbus Barracks, Ohio, he being a second lieutenant in the United States army. A large number of recruits are being licked into shape at Columbus Barracks, and the young officer has a store of amusing anecdotes relating to the "rookies," says the Washington Star.

One of the recruits was walking past as a sentinel when he was approached by the officer of the day, and asked to repeat his instructions. The reply was:

"Walk this post, keeping always on the alert, and don't let any dis-re-pute-able people in, except officers' wives and families."

Another sentinel, in reciting his instructions, said:

"I must not let any children go outside the post alone, unless accompanied by their mothers or nurses."

Couldn't Be Square.

"Of course," said the promoter of the get-rich-quick company, "we can only give the prospective earnings in round numbers."

"Ah, yes," replied the victim, "because they couldn't possibly be square."—Philadelphia Press.

FARMER'S TROLLEY ROAD.

Chicago Inventor Has an Idea Which, He Thinks, Will Prove to Be Very Popular.

The inventors seem to be striving faithfully to relieve the horse of all the heavy hauling which it has in the past been called upon to perform, and it is probable the day is not far distant when pleasure drivers will be the only ones who will find use for this animal. The latest idea along this line of horseless vehicles is the farmer's trolley road, which will make it possible for the raiser of produce to come to town with his load, dispose of it and return home without the aid of his team, the electric current being made to do all the labor through the medium of the apparatus shown in the illustration. The inventor contemplates the installation of private lines by the farmers in a certain locality, or the rental of electric service from one of the suburban trolley companies which now cover the country around every large city. As will be seen, an electric motor is placed on the wagon, and power is obtained from the overhead wire, the connecting pole having a flexible adjustment to overcome all inequalities in the roadway. The horizontal portion of the conductor is divided and insulated, receiving the current from one wire and returning it to the other after it has passed through the motor to drive the wagon. The reason for using a return wire parallel with the power wire is to avoid possibility of shocks to the driver when standing beside the wagon and in contact with it, which might prove dangerous if the return current passed to the earth after use. By gearing the driving shaft low very heavy loads could be transported with comparatively little expense for current, and as there are no heavy storage batteries or power generators aboard there is plenty of room in the wagon for the loading of produce, etc. Daniel S. Bergin, of Chicago, Ill., is the inventor.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

CROPS FOR POULTRY.

By Raising Them the Winter Income from the Hens Can Be Increased Materially.

Special crops for poultry could be made profitable, as a great many crops can be grown to advantage on farms where large numbers of poultry are kept, and which create a home demand for the articles produced. Seeds of sun-flower, millet, rape, kale, Kaffir corn, pop-corn, and even sorghum, could be utilized, the cattle and sheep consuming the bulky portions, and the fowls the seeds. Where any of such foods become too woody for stock they may be made to do service as bedding. Cow peas are highly relished by fowls, and so is white clover, while crimson clover will supply green food late in the fall and very early in the spring, the same as rye. The regulation diet of corn and wheat in winter is not conducive to the production of eggs, but when the fowls have a variety they will largely increase this production. By selling such crops in the form of eggs better prices are obtained therefor, while the revenue from eggs and poultry will be obtained at a season of the year when the farm will be producing nothing at all. Some special foods may be grown on the farm that cannot easily be procured otherwise. A poultryman who makes his hens lay grows a patch of cow peas. The seed is put away for the use of the fowls in winter, the vines being fed to his cow. The peas are cooked—one quart for 30 hens—and thickened with a mixture of equal parts of bran and cornmeal. For summer he grows a patch in some other location, and when the peas are matured he lets his hens go in and help themselves, they receiving no other food. It may be necessary if the vines are too high to run a roller over them. The vines are left as a covering for the land, being plowed under in the spring. The peas pay an excellent profit in eggs, and the hens are kept out of mischief and in a thrifty condition in working for them.—Rural World.

The Hens Require Shade.

Shade is as necessary to the welfare of your poultry as to yourself. They do not have access to the water cooler or to the ice cream soda fount to make their thirst or cool their feverish bodies. If nature has not provided for them by means of trees or other foliage, you must provide it artificially by means of small shed roofs in various portions of their runs. We have found that a low frame covered with canvas or tarred paper is a desirable thing. Also, take out your windows and substitute wire netting.—Inland Poultry Journal.

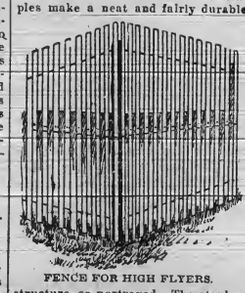
WEEDS IN PASTURES.

The Only Way of Checking Their Development is by Grazing Fewer Head per Acre.

So long as the conditions in nature surrounding the wild prairie grass remain the same they will continue to grow in about the same proportions and to about the same extent. Man, however, changes natural conditions violently. By breaking sod and putting in crops he opens places which afford room for strange plants, weeds, the seeds of which are carried thence to neighboring grazing land. Even then they will not drive out the wild grasses if the latter are left to themselves. On the contrary, if a farm is abandoned, weeds may riot for a few years on the broken land, but the sod returns, the soil eventually in the prairie regions, and the weeds are crowded out.

The most common cause of weed invasion of native pastures is overpasturing, whereby the wild grasses are kept down so that they cannot compete with the weeds. The latter, being unpalatable, usually are left undisturbed by the stock. Sometimes there are introduced weeds never found on the prairie, as ironweed, snow on the mountain or milkweed, horseweed and thistle. Others are tough prairie perennials growing among the grasses, but not spreading greatly, unless the latter are kept down.

Prevention of weed invasion of pastures is generally perfectly possible by grazing fewer head per acre. Compare the number of weeds in a prairie pasture with those in an adjoining piece of similar land not grazed, but kept to be mowed for hay.



What number of stock per acre can be safely grazed depends on the region. In the "short grass" country 15 to 20 acres per head must be allowed. In central or eastern Kansas two and a half acres per head is perhaps the limit.

Every farmer can tell by observation when weeds are coming in. If so, it is a sign to reduce the number of stock per acre. No man can afford to raise stock in such numbers that they use up the capital itself (the land) by killing out the pasture grasses which make it valuable instead of consuming the interest only.—H. F. Roberts, in Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

POULTRY LOT FENCE.

structure, as portrayed. The staples, if clinched carefully, do not work loose so easily as the nail and slat combination often used. Place the wires, which should be galvanized, a little less than three feet apart and stretch fairly tight. Use staples of galvanized wire such as come with poultry netting.—B. D. Keefe, in Farm and Home.

DISEASES OF HOGS.

Most of Them Can Be Prevented by Cleanliness and a Pure Water Supply.

There is no doubt that filth causes very much of the disease that affects swine. We hardly realize the importance of extreme cleanliness till disease comes and begins to carry off the hogs that have cost so much effort and money to bring near to the marketable age. Yet a little extra care here and there would have prevented the great losses. The man that waters his hogs from a deep well—so deep that the water contains no germs—is wise. Not only does he prevent the spread of such diseases as hog cholera, but he also prevents the introduction into the digestive tracts of the animals of animal parasites. The history of the spread of hog cholera shows that it has often come by the way of streams from which the hogs drink. The brooks and streams are the connecting links between the different farms. The hogs of a hundred farms may all drink from the same brook. If the hogs at the headwaters of the stream have cholera it is only natural that all the hogs down the stream also take the disease. Investigations have shown this to be quite commonly the case.—Farmers' Review.

Clean Up Around the House.

Do you take a day occasionally to clean up around the farm home? They're among the most profitable days we spend. Rubbish of all kinds is thrown together and burned, and the ashes used to fertilize our strawberry patch. Old, worn-out machinery torn up and sold to the junk man, and the bolts, etc., kept to make new handy contrivances. A few such days spent each year take away that ragged, forlorn appearance, that elicits disgustful glances from the tidy visitor or passer-by.—Farm Journal.

Every indication points to the inevitable high price of sheep for the next two or three years at least.

ILLINOIS THE BICYCLE STATE.

Manufactures More of the Two-Wheeled Silent Steeds Than Any Other State of the Union.

Illinois is the leading state of the union so far as relates to the manufacture of bicycles, according to a bulletin issued by the census office. Illinois manufactured 28.1 per cent. of the total product for 1900, the number of establishments being 60 and the amount of capital invested $7,694,658. Ohio is the nearest competitor to Illinois, the percentage of the product manufactured in that state being 12.8. The number of establishments in the Buckeye state is 34 and the capital invested is $4,354,576. New York is third on the list, having manufactured 12 per cent. of the product. The number of establishments in the Empire state is 66 and the capital invested $3,326,943. Connecticut, which holds the fourth place, manufactures 11.5 per cent of the products in its 24 establishments. The Nutmeg state has $4,215,399 invested in this industry. In the United States there are 312 bicycle establishments with a capital of $24,783,659, and the product is valued at $31,915,908.

STUDYING SUGAR PLANTS.

Dr. Wiley of Agricultural Department, Making Some Interesting Experiments.

Dr. Wiley, chemist of the agricultural department, is making some interesting experiments in sugar producing plants on the farm in the Potomac bottoms, and which are operated by the department. Sugar cane, sorghum, sugar beets, Rocky Ford muskmelons and sugar corn—all sugar producing plants—have been planted side by side, and Dr. Wiley finds they each flourish with equal vigor in this climate. This is in itself a matter of much surprise to scientists, as some of the plants were thought to flourish best in hot climates or near the Atlantic slope, while other sugar producing plants were thought to grow only in cold countries. Dr. Wiley's experiment is not so much to find their adaptability to a temperate climate as to determine the sugar producing qualities of these products and their relative value. For this purpose the plants give every evidence of perfect development in the District of Columbia.

BLOW TO SUBMARINE BOATS.

Adverse Opinion from Naval Officers May Cut Off Appropriation for Further Experiment.

Three important naval officers took such strong grounds against submarine torpedo boats in their present stage of development before the senate naval committee that it is possible no appropriation will be made at this session for the purchase of craft of this type. Rear Admiral Bowles thought it inadvisable to experiment further with the Holland boat, while Admiral Bradford quoted Admiral von Tirpitz, head of the German navy, as saying: "I am so sure that they are of no value that I refuse to waste any fore time in experimenting with them." Capt. Sigsbee expressed the opinion that it would be well to go slow for the present and not purchase 30 or 40 submarine boats.

St. Louis Relieved.

The St. Louis exposition management must enter into a contract not to open the fair on Sundays before the government will hand over any more funds. Provision in the appropriation bill makes this imperative. St. Louis should be thankful, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, that the government has decided the matter for her.

HYPNOTISM THAT FAILED.

The Scheming Operator Got Too Near His Subject and Something Happened.

"I have come," said the clever young hypnotist, making two or three mysterious passes with his hands and looking straight into the old man's eyes, relates the Chicago Record-Herald, "to ask you for your daughter. We love each other very dearly—look out, there is a horsefly buzzing near your left ear!—and we want your blessing. I am fully prepared to take care of a family—you don't remember your name, do you?—and the sweet one who is so near and dear to you will be perfectly safe in my keeping. Of course you would not think of raising an objection that might make her unhappy all the rest of her life, would you? Yes, it is very kind of you to give—oh, poor old donkey, have you eaten all the nice fresh grass there? Come, I will lead you to another spot where it is longer and greener, and we will—" . . .

"All right, all right," said the office boy, snapping his thumb and finger close to the clever young hypnotist's ear. "Wake up! It's all over."

"Where am I?" the clever young hypnotist asked.

"Out in the alley. I guess the donkey didn't like that last grass. He kicked."

DRIVEN TO DESPERATION.

Seasick Maiden Gives Up Everything, Including Her Love for Her Lover.

The maiden was suffering with seasickness. In many ways, at the time when the incidents of this story open, a veritable mal de mermaid. Her lover, whose heart ached at her most unromantic gaspings over the rail and her agitated and strenuous effort to tamp the hole in the bottom of the sea, approached her tenderly, relates the Los Angeles Herald.

"It is too bad," he said, idiotically.

"Is it?" she asked, satirically, as she again made Pelee-oid demonstrations.

"Too bad you had to give up," he continued, with the same beautiful intelligence that characterizes all persons who try to render first aid to the seasick.

"Yes," she said, with exasperated savageness, as she wiped the tears from her reddening lids. "I have given up everything but my love for you; and now"—she made a wild reach for the rail once more, and, after a few moments, she completed her sentence—"there, that's gone, too."

But they made up again when she was better.

Why It Was All Right.—"You needn't be at all afraid to speak to papa, George. I am sure he will be all right." "What makes you think so?" "He asked me last night what your business is, and when I said you were a retired coal-dealer he smiled and said he guessed that settled it."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER

Cured By Peruna of Systemic Catarrh

An Interesting Letter From Mrs. M. K. Bousch, of Richmond, and Her Little Daughter, Pearl.

Mrs. M. K. Bousch, Richmond, Va., writes:

"I had catarrh all through my system for two years and could get no relief. I was advised to try Peruna, and I have taken five bottles of it and am well and better now than I have been for years. I can advise any one who has catarrh of any part of the body to take Peruna. My little girl, who is eleven years old had catarrh, but was cured by Peruna. Before I began to take Peruna I was sick all the time, but now I am entirely cured and all praise is due Peruna."—Mrs. M. K. Bousch.

Miss Pearl Bousch, writes: "When I was a baby I contracted catarrh, and was doctored by several good physicians, but none did me any good. My mother was taking Peruna at the time and gave some of it to me, and I soon began to improve, and am now well and fat as a little pig. I am twelve years old. The doctors told mother I had the consumption, but it was only catarrh."—Miss Pearl Bousch.

It is no longer a question as to whether Peruna can be relied on to cure all such cases. During the many years in which Peruna has been put to test in all forms and stages of acute and chronic catarrh no one year has put this remedy to greater test than the past year.

Peruna is the acknowledged catarrh remedy of the age. Dr. Hartman, the compounder of Peruna, has written a book on the phases of catarrh peculiar to women, entitled, "Health and Beauty." It will be sent free to any address by The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

For Circuit Clerk.

We are authorized to announce S. E. TERRILL, of Idlewild, as a candidate for Circuit Court Clerk, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

THE Southern Methodists have 24,692 church buildings valued at $23,000.

WITH the Harvest Home next Saturday will close the fair and picnic season in this county.

THE State of Maine gave a Republican majority of 25,000 the other day—about twice the usual majority in an off year.

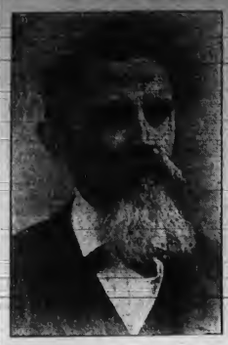
J. F. BLYTH, of Burlington, Democrat, and Elihu Alden, of Petersburg, Republican, have been appointed Election Commissioners for this county.

THE mystery surrounding the death of George Conrad on the bridge at Bromley, a Ludlow suburb, is no nearer solved than it was the day after the body was found.

THE president's swing around the circle will give him some idea as to his popularity with the people. There is no doubt but what he will be his party's nominee, and then how the anti-civil service element will kick.

LONDON has had an epidemic of murder and other crimes, to account for which a local specialist lays the blame on the weather. Within a period of five weeks there were twenty murders and 350 deaths from violence, including sixty suicides.

PRATT, the man who was driving the Presidents coach that was wrecked in Massachusetts, refused to take $1,000 offered to him by another man who desired to drive the President across the country. But Pratt himself prized the distinction too highly and refused to consider it.



IT is said that the Republicans in Covington are doing their best to arrange with the Democrats there, by which they will knife Judge Painter at the November election. Should anything of that kind be accomplished the Covington man, who, in the future, becomes a candidate for an office in which the counties have a voice, will have a rough road to travel.

BENCH WARRANTS have been issued in St. Louis for the arrest of 18 members of the former House of Delegates. The warrants were issued on the testimony of former Delegate J. K. Murrell, who fled to Mexico last spring after being indicted. Murrell has returned and made a full confession relative to the transactions of the combine organized to control municipal legislation and to traffic in votes of delegates.

THE Kentucky Confederate Home will be located at Pewee Valley. The committee having in charge the selection of a location purchased a handsome piece of property at the above named place and will there establish a suitable and attractive home for the old veterans of the Civil War—a place where they may spend the declining years of their eventful lives in peace and quiet and comfort, cared for by those who love them for the principles for which they fought.

FOLLOWING is a list of candidates for the Democratic nomination for State offices: For Governor, J. C. W. Beckham, John K. Hendrick, of Smithland; James D. Black, of Barbourville, and Robert J. Breckinridge, of Danville. Other candidates are for Lieutenant Governor W. P. Thorne, of Henry county, R. H. Tomlinson, of Garrard county, For Auditor: John B. Chenault, of Madison; W. F. Hager, of Boyd, and June W. Gayle, of Owen. For Treasurer: Josh T. Griffith, of Owensboro; Gus W. Richardson, of Meade, and J. T. Gosnell, of Grayson. For Secretary of State: H. V. McChesney, of Livingston county; Harry G. Tandy, of McCracken, and J. M. McIntyre, of Bath. For Attorney General: Willard Mitchell, of Jessamine, and M. B. Hays, of Bell. For Clerk of the Court of Appeals: Robert L. Green, of Bracken, and W. B. O'Connell, of Montgomery. For Superintendent of Public Instruction: Ben Watt, of Warren; Rev. T. N. Arnold, of Franklin; Rev. Lew G. Wallace, of Pendleton, and J. J. Watkins, of Union. For Commissioner of Agriculture; J. M. Frazee, of Mason, and Tobias Gibson, of Fayette.

W. M. ROGERS.

About every man, woman and child in Boone county will recognize the above picture. No man in the county has been before the people more than Mr. Rogers. He has been agent for the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Boone County for fifteen years, and the duties of that position has required him to be out among the people all the time. That he has made a good agent his long service as such justifies no other conclusion. He wants the position again.

[Pendletonian.]

Pendletonites and others throughout the country who are occasionally called on to do service as jurors in the United States courts will hail with delight the following information:

United States Marshals throughout the country were notified a few days ago that jurors in the federal courts are to receive $8 a day for such service instead of $2. This order was in accordance with an act passed at the recent session of Congress, and it applies to grand and petit juries.

The act passed by Congress was the result of petitions sent to Washington by citizens who had done jury duty and by others who argued against the nominal wages earned by men who had to leave their business for hours or days at a time to pass on legal controversies.

The condition in the civil branches of the supreme court are practically the same as in the city court, but it is not in either one of these that the "kicks" are most violent. The man who is unfortunate enough to get a jury summons regards it as a privilege to go to civil tribunals, even at smaller wages, rather than to criminal courts, where he is likely to be locked up over night or perhaps for many nights.

"Occasionally we strike men who would rather be locked up than not,' an official explained. "If a juror happens to be a man called away from regular work at which he earns less than $2 a day he sometimes considers his court service in the light of a vacation. The longer he is locked up the better he likes it, for the state is paying his expenses in hotels and giving him better food than he has at home, besides his $2 a day."

There is probably no food better calculated to promote laying in fowls than cowpeas. Peas or beans of any sort are good, but large ones must be ground, or fowls will rarely eat them. Of cowpeas the smallest variety should be chosen, as fowls unused to such grain must be accustomed to it gradually. But once get them to eat peas and the victory is won. They are a perfect substitute for insects, meat scrap, bloodmeal and other animal preparations that are often so combined with cheap substances that the hens are a long time learning that when they are fed "Lobsmith's concentrated egg food" they ought to lay fluently instead of almost imperceptibly. Pea vines with peas on them cut as soon as the peas are full grown and while yet green thrown into the chicken yard, will give them excercise and the very sort of food their nature craves. They will eat the peas, the leaves, and as much of the stems as they can break up small enough to swallow.

A farmer not far away has three charming daughters who have three attractive beaux. The parent stands in awe of long winter evening with the woodpile decreasing and oil vanishing from the can. He desires very much to invest in a certain kind of clock and will appreciate it if some inventive genius will set his brain to work. He wants a timepiece with a music box attachment so that "Home Sweet Home" will be played at 10 o'clock in the evening, "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp" at 10:15 and "Johnny, Get Your Gun" at 10:30.

O. S. WATTS, Assessor.

Next Monday the new assessor, Owen S. Watts, will enter upon the discharge of his duties. He will make a pains-taking official and will be glad if you prepare yourself and be ready to list your property when he calls upon you. By so doing his work will be greatly expedited. Mr. Watts has selected Elmo Gaines as his deputy. Mr. Gaines was assessor T. J. Willis' efficient deputy, and the numerous friends he made while serving under Mr. Willis will be pleased with his appointment.

ELMO GAINES, Deputy.

Grange Field Day.

The Pomona Grange Field Day brought out quite a good crowd, last Saturday, notwithstanding the unsettled condition of the weather that morning. The dinner provided for the occasion was ample for a much larger gathering, and everyone present enjoyed a most pleasant and profitable day. Speeches were made by the following persons: J. M. Grant, of Carrollton; Hon. J. W. Kennedy, of Union; J. E. Doud, Past Master Indiana State Grange; N. E. Freeman, Secretary Ohio State Grange. The speakers were given excellent attention throughout their remarks and the members of the order were well pleased because of the able manner in which the objects of their organization were placed before the audience. The several speakers were men who have made a study of the aims and objects of the order of Patrons of Husbandry and the needs of the farmers of this country, and presented their views in a forcible manner.

It was 3:30 in the afternoon before the speaking was concluded, and the young people, who had begun to grow restless, were given the floor, when dancing was begun, and continued until the shades of night drew nigh.

It was the first effort at the Field Day, and the success last Saturday will, doubtless, prompt the County Grange to make it an annual celebration.

Keep a record of what you are doing on the farm, the time of planting, harvesting, methods employed in cultivating, yields of grain and hay, sales of cattle and other products. When intelligently kept, such records are invaluable, and it is but little work to jot them down each week in a book kept for this purpose. A comparison year by year leads to better and more profitable farming, the discarding of unprofitable stock and unproductive varieties and the substitution of better ones. A record of events pays, and pays well.—Ex.

No sheriff has served in Green county for twenty years and the authorities won't permit one to qualify. Green county voted bonds for new railroad, only four miles of which was built. Judgements against county on this account cannot be enforced without a sheriff. Serious condition resulting from a county having too little judgment at the outset, and then too little nerve to face the music.

John M. Moody Dead.

John Montgomery Moody was born July 23, 1826, near Tompkinsville, Monroe county, Kentucky, died at his residence near Bellevue, Boone county, Kentucky, of a complication of diseases, on August 28, 1902, aged 76 years, 1 month and 5 days.

Mr. Moody came from the county of his birth to Rising Sun, Indiana, in 1846, and made his home with Taylor S. Pate until 1851, when he came to this county, where he spent the remainder of his life. April 3, 1851, he and Mary Frances Botts, daughter of Richard H. and Mary J. Botts were married. This union was blessed with nine children, two sons and seven daughters, namely: Capt. William Moody, of Rising Sun; Mrs. Laura A. Botts, Mrs. Alice M. Boyles, of Dayton, Ohio; Mrs. Anna B. Pelson, Mrs. Etta J. Smith, of Weisburg, Indiana; Mrs. Hattie D. Cook, Misses Emma and Genie Moody and John H. Moody, all of whom are living. Their mother was born February 7, 1833, near Idlewild, this county, and died October 28, 1875, leaving several of her children quite young, and their father, assisted by their grandfather and grandmother Botts, raised them to a useful manhood and womanhood, and they were a source of great comfort to them in their declining years.

Mr. Moody's funeral was conducted by Rev. Atwood at his late residence on the 30th ult., after which the remains were taken to Petersburg cemetery and interred in the family lot, in the presence of a large concourse of sorrowing friends.

At no home in the county was there greater hospitality found than at the home of John M. Moody, and so far as he was able no man was more generous. At his home the latch string always hung on the outside, and no man received his friends more cordially. He will be missed greatly and his children have the sympathy of the entire community.

Official reports of the appropriations made by the fifty-seventh Congress furnish figures that may well startle the minds of thoughtful men.

The total amount of money appropriated by Congress reached the astonishing sum of $800,625,496. In addition to these specific appropriations, governmental contracts were authorized requiring appropriations for $262,711,465 additional, footing up, all told, over one billion dollars.

But the most astonishing showing of all is a comparison between the amounts appropriated for military and agricultural purposes. These exact figures are; Agricultural appropriations.... $5,208,960 Military appropriations.... 173,213,823.

For military purposes the great government of the United States spends thirty-four dollars every time it spends one dollar for the benefit of agriculture. For the purpose of supporting this military institution every man, woman and child in the United States averages a payment in tariff taxes of $2.75 each; for advancing the great agricultural resources and interests of the country—the source of all prosperity, the heart of the whole body-politic—a fraction more than six cents each!

In the matter of education, comparisons are equally as odious. For the past year, the United States spent six times as much for the army and four times as much for the navy than for higher education. The total expenditure for these two military objects during the last twelve months was greater than the entire outlay for education of any kind throughout the whole country for the same period.

Agriculture and education have taken a back seat before advancing militaryism. The two great mainsprings of the nation are its agricultural resources and its educational advantages; yet both of these are so far outstripped by the demands of a growing military establishment that not for half a century will they, the pension list taken into consideration, class again together.

If imperialism is not in the saddle, it at least has one foot in the stirrup, and the bridle rein in its hand.—Glassgow Times.

What we want is more boys who can figure how many bu. of wheat it will take to seed a farm and how to raise a crop from that seed; more boys that can tell a coffee mill from an engine and can figure the difference in the cost of each, and how much it will cost to run them; more girls that can figure the cost and make a good baking of bread; more girls who know more about keeping house than about translating Greek or Latin sentences.

Yours respectfully,

H. F. BLASE,

534 MADISON AVENUE, COVINGTON, KY.

An officer of a city police detail said recently: When I was a mounted policeman I learned of a most humane and kind way of curing a balky horse: It not only never fails, but it does not give the slightest pain to the animal. When the horse refuses to go take the front foot at the fetlock and bend the knee joint. Hold it thus for three minutes, and let it down and the horse will go. The only way in which I can account for the effective mastery of the horse is that he can think of only one thing at a time, and having made up his mind not to go, my theory is that bending the leg diverts his mind.

Culled from various papers: "He was stabbed in the fracas." "She sat down upon his return." "She fainted upon his departure." "He kissed her upon her entrance. "He came in upon her permission." "The Chinaman fell down and broke his leg just above the opium joint." "The steamer Mary Ellen was burned to the water's edge this morning and every soul on board except the chambermaid, who saved herself by swimming ashore. She was loaded with pig iron and was insured for $40,000."

Advertisements: "Room for rent by lady 12 feet square." "Bicycle for sale by a young man with a leather seat." "Wanted—Two young men who will be treated as one of the family." "Rooms for rent by a family with a southern exposure." "Shoes shined on the inside." "A poor woman wants washing." "Wanted a girl cook." "Dog for sale—will eat anything—very fond of children." —Beacon Light.

A corn crop of two and one half billion bushels, which is three hundred million bushels more than the biggest crop in the history of the country, is predicted for this year by traffic men and grain statisticians, says the Railway Age. Two and a half billions bushels of corn means 140,000,000,000 pounds, which means 70,000,000 tons, which at the liberal average of thirty tons to the car, means 2,333,338 cars, which at fifty cars to the train means 46,666 trains, which means loud calls for cars and engines, long hours and increased pay for train crews, large earnings for the railway, much money for farmers, merchants and all related industries, and a continuance of general prosperity.

How much of the possible two and a half million car loads will actually be carried by rail, and how much of it will be consumed on the farms can not be so easily figured; but the bulk of this prodigous yield will reach the railways in the shape of corn or of stock, and the roads in the corn growing regions will have all that they can do for many months and every railway and business in the country will be benefitted from the prosperity of the producers of this great staple.

The assault of forestry on the Great American desert has been started by preparations of the department of agriculture for establishing nurseries and planting on the two forest reserves recently established by President Roosevelt in the sand-hill region of Nebraska. Surveys are now being made of both reserves, and nursery sites will be chosen and put in readiness for planting by the end of summer. The most active work will be on the Dismal River reserve, where all preparations for nursery planting will be completed by September, and during the fall a large collection of forest tree seeds will be made. The principal species used at first will be jack pine, western yellow pine, white fir and Colorado blue spruce. The Nebraska reserves were the first of this kind, and these are so well thought of that active efforts are now being made in Kansas and California to have similiar reserves established.

Late fodder crops include Kaffir corn, millet, sorghum, rape, corn the cereals and the clovers. One writer claims that where hogs are kept rape is the greatest of all those mentioned, as a half acre will feed forty hogs during the season if the crop gets a good start. Sorghum is looked upon as one of the very best crops for shocking and curing to be fed out during the winter. As this crop may be needed after cereals have been harvested, there is still ample opportunity to prepare the soil and sow the seed. If the soil is plowed to a depth of three or four inches and afterwards well worked down with the harrow and cultivators such a seed bed will favor the production of several tons of cured sorghum per acre. One writer recommends Mammoth Early Orange as being the best sorghum for both fodder and seed purposes.—Iowa Homestead.

Near the corporate limits of Tompkinsville there stood an unusually large beech tree, on which were plainly visible the name and date: "D. Boone, 1776." The tree had grown until the letters were eight inches broad. Recently the tree was cut down, and a section on which were the name and date was cut out. In cutting up the tree a round section of the heart with three scores of an ax on it was taken out. This section was seven inches in diameter, showing that the tree was only that size when the scores were made. The rings of the tree, which indicate each year's growth, were counted from the bark to where the piece was split off which had the scores on it, and found to number 126. This proves that the scores with the ax were made 126 years ago, or in 1776, the same year that the name and date were cut.

Nature has a peculiar method of evening up things.

In this country this has been a season of rain. So constant has been the downpour that the average man, whether in San Francisco or Skowhegan, he would as soon think of appearing on the street without his trousers as minus an umbrella. It rains and then it rains again, which in no manner prevents a third deluge at a most inopportune time.

In Australia it does not rain at all. The burning sun parches the earth and is making a desert of a once fertile territory.

There are cattle four years old in Western Queensland that have never yet had wet skins.

Mail routes are being abandoned because portions of the land are deserted. Four thousand miles of road and forty routes are involved. For miles and miles the country is bald. There is not a blade of grass or a weed, and sheep are kept alive by feeding them scrub.

On one section the yield of lambs in 1894 was 94,443. This year the yield was 784.

New South Wales has also felt the drought fully and severely, and has lost 30,000,000 sheep since 1895.

And there is no sign of rain.

As between a drought and a flood the flood is always perferred.

The grumblers in America have only to consider the condition of things in Australia to realize that they have much to be thankful for, including the rains.—Cin. Post.

The destruction of the sheep by drouth in Australia is sad, even if it does help the American grower. In May, 520 carloads of starving sheep left one station in search of feed, railroads making special rates for starving stock. Ground corn cobs, mixed with molasses, sell at 20 shillings ($5) per ton. In Queensland colonists of 50 years' experience have never known such a condition. The reduction of numbers, prevention of natural increase and diminution of wool product will cause a check to the sheep industry requiring years for recovery.

Christian Churches Convention.

Members of the Christian Church from every neighborhood in the county were in attendance.

The day could not have been better for the meeting.

For some time it has been felt by the workers of the Churches of Christ, that an organization was needed through which the work of the churches could be better accomplished and the workers become better acquainted with each other.

At the appointed time the convention was called to order in the spacious Universalist church, the use of which was most graciously extended to us. Bro. E. D. Jones called the brethren together and was elected president of the convention. Bro. Edgar Riley led the devotional services. Charles H. Acra, Grant, Ky., was elected secretary.

Bro. H. W. Elliot, State Evangelist, the first speaker, being absent, the president called on Bro. J. W. Rogers, Walton, Ky., who introduced the subject. He made a telling speech in favor of cooperative church work. His speech was fortified by facts drawn from church history. Bros. McNeal and Miller followed with good speeches.

Bro. Milo Atkinson, Vanceburg, Ky., made a capital address on the Problem of County Churches. The problems as the speaker saw them were: 1st, How to get the country brethren to be more liberal. 2nd, How to get the country churches to cooperate so as to sustain preaching. 3d, How to train proper Elders and leaders for the local organizations.

The Woman's Work in the Churches was presented by sister J. D. Ellis, Newport, Ky. In her very exalted talk she told us of her visit to the mountains of Kentucky, and how the people there need the gospel. She touched all our hearts. Many of us resolved to do more for missions.

Then came the noon recess. The tables were laden with the good things of the land. It seems to the writer that the people of Boone county know better how to feed a hungry convention than those of any place he has been. Much credit is due to the citizens of Burlington and the brethren and the friends of the county for the handsome way in which they entertained the convention. The writer can say that it was one of the most delightful days he has spent for some time. Three times the number could have been fed, and like the rich man we read of in sacred lore, "fared sumptuously."

Promptly at 1 p. m. the convention was called to order, and the report of the committee received. Florence was the place chosen for the next convention, and the third Thursday in September the time.

Bro. E. D. Jones was elected president; Bro. James Riley, vice-president, and sister Nora Baker, secretary. The convention was wise in selecting these officers. It means that the work will be pushed in Boone county, as it has never been before.

A line of work was reported and adopted in which the churches were urged to greater interest in the Sunday school and missionary work.

Next came an address by Bro. J. W. Rogers, whom Bro. Jones introduced as the historian of the Christian church. His speech was a great one. Bro. Rogers is a specialist in church history. His address ought to be preserved for future reference.

Bro. McNeal, of Newport, made a very touching appeal for Home Missions, founded largely on his own experience while preaching in the State of Wisconsin.

Sister S. M. Harrison made a very fine address on the Power of the Gospel to Emancipate Woman. I shall not attempt to describe it. I can't, it was so classic. Sister Harrison is one of the best speakers that the writer has heard among the brethren and sisters.

The last address was by Bro. Geo. A. Miller, of Covington, Ky. His address was splendid. In his address he analyzed the religious movements at the opening of the 19th century that led to the Restoration movement under the Campbells and Stone.

The committee on resolutions reported the following, which were adopted:

Resolved, 1. That we extend our thanks to the members of the Universalist Church of Burlington for the use of their building.

2. That we extend our thanks to the people of Burlington for the hospitality they have shown us, and especially to the ladies who have prepared the best dinner that has ever been set before any convention.

3. That we extend our thanks to the ladies of Boone county, irrespective of any church affiliation, for their baskets and interest they have taken in this meeting.

4. That we extend our thanks to the visiting brethren for their addresses and words of encouragement.

5. That we endorse the work of Bro. Jones in trying to organize Boone county, and pray that this can be accomplished.

6. That we extend our thanks to the Editor of the Recorder for offering to print this report of our convention without remuneration.

On the whole the convention was a great success. The brethren and sisters all went away, feeling "it was good to be there," and resolving to do more for the cause of Christ.

Re-elected Old Board.

The annual election of officers of the North [illegible] Agricultural Association was held on the fair grounds at Florence, last Wednesday afternoon. The following officers were reelected without opposition: B. F. McGlasson, president; E. H. Blankenbeker, vice-president; Alvin Perry, secretary; A. B. Rouse, treasurer. James L. Riley, Orin Percival, W. E. Walton J. O. Griffith and F. A. Utz were reelected directors on the first ballot. Having been sworn in the board held a meeting and declared a dividend of 12 per cent. After the payment of the dividend there will remain in the hands of the treasurer a neat little sum ready for use in case of an emergency. The gate receipts of the fair this year exceeded those of last year about $150, Saturday being the largest day.

"I want all the world to know," writes Rev. C. J. Budlong, of Ashaway, R. I., "what a thoroughly good and reliable medicine I found in Electric Bitters. They cured me of jaundice and liver troubles that had caused me great suffering for many years. For a genuine all-round cure they excel anything I ever saw." Electric Bitters are the surprise of all for their wonderful work in Liver, Kidney and Stomach troubles. Don't fail to try them. Only 50cts Satisfaction is guaranteed by W. F. One day last week William Pope was trying to spring a plank on a building on which he and Robert Wilson were at work, when the joist on which he had his prize rigged broke, letting him fall a distance of ten feet, where he struck the joist laid for the lower floor. He was rendered unconscious for some time, and while his injuries were painful they were not serious.

Mr. Thomas P. Crisler, of Bullittsville neighborhood, sold his farm of 126 acres to Mrs. Sallie Calamese, last week, at $40 per acre. The farm is the old Crisler homestead, and was settled by Jonas Crisler, who came from Madison Court House, Culpepper county, Virginia, about 1816. Mr. Crisler and son, Dr. L. H. Crisler and wife, will be welcomed as citizens in Burlington.

In the premium list published last week, second premium on flat-foot walking horse was published as awarded T. J. Hughes, when in fact it was given Waller L. Hager, son of Peter Hager, of East Bend. The premium on the best display of jellies was awarded Mrs. J. H. Eddins instead of Mrs. T. H. Clore as published last week. Mrs. Clore took 2d premium.

It appears that some persons who are not residents of the Walton Graded Common School district think that they can move into that district and reside there during the school term and get the benefit of free tuition for their children. In that they are clearly mistaken, as the law expressly provides that the trustees shall make terms upon which nonresident pupils may be admitted to the school. A person moving into the district to remain only during the term of school is clearly not entitled to free tuition, as only permanent residents can be free patrons. If persons desirous of having the benefit of free tuition at the Walton Graded School are not willing to become permanent citizens of the district they must be prepared to pay the tuition fixed by the trustees. If the trustees permit the new-comer to decide what constitutes a permanent resident for school purposes the school might as well be thrown open to the public without restriction. The trustees assisted by the county superintendent will have no trouble protecting the school from being imposed on by persons who are not residents of the district.

Homer Riggs, of Pt. Pleasant neighborhood, and Montgomery Anderson, of Constance, were transacting business in Burlington, last Thursday. They are two of the county's clever men.

A VISIT TO LUDLOW.

We made a short visit to Ludlow last Friday, where we met several natives of this county, who are prominent business men in that thriving town. The first called on were Clore & Snyder, who have a nice drugstore and are doing a thriving business. They are clever gentlemen and very popular with the people. Mike looks very much at home in his new quarters and regrets that he did not become a citizen of Ludlow many years ago.

The next to greet us was T. J. McNeal, three times mayor of the city, and who has been for some time a leading member of the school board, and if there is anything of which Ludlow people are proud, it is their handsome and commodious school building and excellent school. Jeff as is a majority of the citizens, is an anti-vehicle license advocate, and never loses an opportunity to expound anti-license doctrine.

It would never do for a person from this part of the county to visit Ludlow and not meet Dr. R. H. Crisler, who has placed himself on easy street by administering to the relief of suffering humanity in that town and vicinity. He has one of the handsomest homes in the city, most conveniently located on the principal street. The Doctor has but one child a son, Carlton, whom he is giving a splendid education in medicine, and he will soon be ready to relieve his father of much of the hard labor resulting from an extensive practice.

At the bank we met Chester Davis, of Hebron, who but recently accepted a position with that institution, and who is making himself so useful that his services there will soon become indispensable. We also met and were introduced to Messrs. Fleming and Grant, president and cashier respectively of the bank. They are very pleasant gentlemen and their bank appears to be doing a good business. Mr. Fleming is the present State Senator from Kenton county. He believes in his town, and is doing everything in his power for its upbuilding, and his labor in that direction will bear substantial fruit in a few years.

After visiting several other cities some of them in the far West, A. E. Chambers, dentist, decided that Ludlow offered the best opportunity and he hung out his shingle there last February. He has nice parlors on Elm street and says his practice so far has been very satisfactory.

Calling at the Globe Tea Co. on Elm street, Mr. Lahman, proprietor, and a corps of clerks were found busy supplying their customers from a large and well selected stock of groceries. This grocery is conveniently located and Boone county people will do well to call there when they want fresh groceries.

Mr. Lahman planted a small ad in the RECORDER which will be found elswhere.

John S. McCormick, a very pleasant gentleman, has a large drug emporium on Elm street, where everything kept in a first-class drugstore is to be found, and where the prescription business is given the greatest care. Mr. McCormick gave the RECORDER a card that will be found elswhere, and he will be glad to meet people from this county who want anything in his line.

Mr. Oscar Gaines, who was secretary of the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company for this county for many years, is a candidate for that position, and he and Mr. Souther, the incumbent, are making an interesting race. Mr. Gaines has a great many warm friends in this race.

If you ask a fellow for an "ad" or a few locals they will tell you they don't believe in advertising—a paper is never read. But let one of these fellows get caught kissing the hired girl or chasing a loose piece of calico up the street after dark or struggling with a jug of "amarin" water, he will ask the editor not to publish it in the paper where everybody will read it.—Ex.

THE PEOPLE ALLIANCE.

The Society Favors a Compulsory Arbitration Law.

Hazleton, Pa., Sept. 5.—The convention of the people alliance, called for the purpose of putting some plan in operation for the settlement of the anthracite miners' strike, opened Thursday with about 75 delegates in attendance, representing 15 different coal region towns. A committee consisting of one member from each alliance represented was appointed to confer as to the best method to be adopted by the convention for the bringing about a termination of the struggle. The convention sent a telegram to President Roosevelt congratulating him on his escape from serious injury. Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, who has been invited to attend, sent his regrets.

The committee appointed to draw up a plan for terminating the strike reported unanimously in favor of a special session of the state legislature to enact the following legislation as proposed by the convention:

Compulsory arbitration; that present legislation be revised so that the state may have more power over foreign corporations doing business within its borders; the passage of a law making it illegal for any person under 21 years of age to be employed more than eight hours a day and that those articles of the state constitution which relate to the control vested in the legislature over the charters of corporations and giving the legislature power to annul, revoke or alter these charters if the public interests are endangered by violation of the constitution and forbidding common carriers from being interested in the production of any industry be made effective. A motion that the weighing of coal be also made compulsory was voted down.

The alliance will ask all boards of trade and towns in the anthracite field to co-operate with and continue the work of the organization.

The policy of President Roosevelt against alleged illegal combinations was indorsed. The committee which recommended the settlement plan was made a permanent body and instructed to carry the recommendations of the convention to Gov. Stone. The committee has asked for him to receive its members. The convention adjourned sine die Thursday evening.

MILITARY INSTRUCTORS.

There Is a Scarcity of Officers on the Active List to Supply the Demand.

Washington, Sept. 5.—The war department is experiencing some trouble in finding a sufficient number of officers on the active list to supply the demand for military instructors in colleges. Under the new order adopted the colleges are divided into three classes. Agricultural schools make up one class and strictly military schools make up another. The third class is composed of all other schools to which army officers are detailed. Up to the present time it has been the practice to assign active officers to the purely military schools, retired officers to the schools which do not make a specialty of military education and either retired or active officers to the agricultural schools. Under the new order it is held that only active officers may be assigned to the agricultural schools. This determination will necessitate the relief of a considerable number of retired officers who now are assigned to such schools and the department is hard pressed to spare enough officers from the active list for this work.

THE GRAND DUKE BORIS.

The President Entertained the Distinguished Visitor at Luncheon.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Sept. 5.—The president entertained Grand Duke Boris at luncheon. The grand duke came to Oyster Bay from Newport on Ogden Mills' yacht the Felicia. With him were Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador at Washington; Private Secretary to the Grand Duke Greaves, Ogden Mills and Assistant Secretary of State Peirce, the representative of this government. The president met his distinguished guests in the wide hall of his home on Sagamore Hill and after the presentations, which were made by Count Cassini, luncheon was announced. The grand duke called simply to pay his respects and at 3:30 the party left on the Felicia for Newport.

THE OIL FUEL SYSTEM.

Interesting Report of Lieut. Winchell, U. S. N., an Expert.

An Important Advantage in the Oil Fuel is the Great Reduction of the Engine Room Force—Regular Temperature Maintained.

Washington, Sept. 6.—The report of Lieut. Ward Winchell, U. S. N., the expert detailed by the navy department to observe the installation and efficiency of the oil fuel system as fitted to the Oceanic Steamship Co.'s steamer Mariposa, has been received at the navy department. The report is an interesting one and contains matter of great value to the shipping and naval world, giving positive information in regard to the evaporative efficiency of the boilers and setting out some facts relative to the use of oil as fuel, which have been earnestly sought from the navy department by steamship men and oil producers as well as technical papers. Some of these facts follow:

The Mariposa's gross displacement was 3,150 tons and her average horse power with oil about 2,481, giving her a daily average of 354 knots and a mean speed of 13.58 with 278 barrels of oil per day.

This was 50 per cent. less in weight than would be required of coal, for one and one-half pounds of oil sufficed to produce a horse power. An important advantage in the oil fuel was the reduction of the engine room force from 36 to 20 men. The ship used only 12 of her 18 furnaces, burning crude oil in two burners in each furnace by means of an air compressor of a capacity of 1,000 cubic feet per minute at 20 pounds pressure. All of the burners were not used except at short intervals.

Every precaution was taken to insure safety by ventilating the oil tanks and otherwise. The entire refuse after a run of 3,438 miles from San Francisco to Tahiti, barely filled two ash buckets and the flames did not affect the boilers unfavorably. Difficulties experienced were confined to the choking of strainers, which can be obviated by duplicating those parts, and in the regulation of the supply of oil to feeders. When the air compressor needed overhauling in one or two instances, recourse was had to a steam spray which wisely had been provided.

Lieut. Winchell says that if fewer men are needed in the fire rooms with oil, it is necessary to secure men of higher intelligence, with mechanical aptitude and nerve, closely to watch the furnaces. The essentials are that there shall be a constant air pressure for atomising, that provision shall be made to maintain regular temperature of the oil and that the oil strainers be watched steadily. Lieut. Winchell's report concludes that the Mariposa's trip was remarkable in many respects and was not only a tribute to the skill of the Pacific coast mechanics, but to the enterprise of the company which first installed the oil burners in lieu of coal.

WRECKED BY A MOB.

House of a Non-Union Mine-Worker at Hudson, Pa., Almost Demolished.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 6.—The house of Lawrence Tarwoski, a non-union mine-worker at Hudson, six miles north of this city, was wrecked by a mob Friday night. Every window in the house was broken. Tarwoski was not at home at the time and his wife, who was alone, fled in terror from the place.

The strikers at Hudson engaged in a march and carried a number of banners on which were inscriptions threatening non-union men who are at work at the mines.

THE MUSIC HALL FIRE.

Total Damage Will Not Greatly Exceed $100,000—The Fall Festival.

Cincinnati, Sept. 5.—The late estimate of loss by the fire in Music hall, etc., will not greatly exceed $100,000. Fire destroyed the Odeon proper, the Lyceum, the Auditorium, 19 class rooms of the College of Music, a part of Horticultural hall of Music hall, the art gallery and the south wing of the front Horticultural hall early Thursday morning, but the fall festival will be opened on the day announced. President Frank Foulds stood in the midst of smoke and flames at the break of day, and by his side stood Director Robert Reynolds. While the firemen were fighting the flames the two directors—the firts on the scene—authorized the announcement that the festival would open on the day advertised with every feature of the show intact. Not one minute would be lost. An hour later exhibits were being taken into Music hall. As the directors gathered one by one, they all said that nothing would stop the opening of the festival on time. Their great concern was for the famous Rochegrosse painting of the Fall of Babylon, a $100,000 picture that took a medal at the Paris salon in 1893. It was in the gallery on the second floor, where fire was raging. The picture was boxed up and fortunately it escaped damage that will not exceed $50. The loss on the Odeon proper and its sub-buildings will not exceed $100,000, while $6,000 will cover the loss on Music hall. All this is covered by insurance. The fire started in the rear of the Auditorium under the stage from some unknown cause. Electric wires are said to have been the cause of the fire, but there is no way of getting at the real cause.

AN EXTRA SESSION.

Gov. Stone Has Decided to Convene the Pennsylvania Legislature.

Pittsburg, Pa., Sept. 4.—"An extra session of the legislature would cost the state less money than it is costing to maintain the militia in the antracite region to prevent and suppress riots."

In these words Gov. Stone indicated to a few of his friends during his visit here his purpose to call an extra session of the Pennsylvania legislature and try to end the anthracite strike. Mr. Stone is said to believe that by these means an end of the strike could be made in less than 30 days.

The plan he proposes is a compulsory arbitration law. Under a carefully thought out scheme which he has prepared, a committee appointed under his proposed new law would arbitrate the strike whether the strikers or the operators were willing or not. Ample provision will be made to compel both sides to accept the award. Gov Stone is confirmed in his belief that the proposed compulsory arbitration law woul stand the most severe tests in the courts. The principal which will be involved to compel the parties to the great labor dispute to submit third parties to pass upon the respective rights is that the general public rights are greater than those of either. The courts have repeatedly upheld this principle both against capital and labor.

THE BIG MINERS' STRIKE.

President Roosevelt Has No Power to Take Action in the Matter.

Washington, Sept. 4.—Carroll D. Wright, commissioner of labor, was designated by the president in June last to investigate and report to him the causes and conditions accompanying the present controversy between the Pennsylvania anthracite coal operators and their miners. Twelve days later Mr. Wright suomitted his finding to the president.

After carefully going over the report the president submitted it to the attorney general, who, after giving it full and careful consideration, reports that the executive has no power whatever to take action in the matter.

This is in addition to the $100,000 which was sent to the island immediately after the catastrophe of May and the subscriptions obtained in the United States and other countries which were sent directly to Martinique. A sum of over $1,400,000 is consequontly still available for relief work.

A BIG NAVAL VICTORY.

War Ships Steamed Into Newport Harbor Unobserved.

Gunners in Forts After Working the Big Guns for a Few Minutes Had to Desist and Man the Secondary Batteries.

Newport, R. I., Sept. 5.—Two cruisers and three battleships of Adm. Higginson's fleet ran the guns of Forts Adams and Wetherill Friday night, getting within broadside range for all their guns before they were picked up by the searchlights of the forts. The fact that the Brooklyn got to the mouth of the harbor before it was picked up by the searchlights is considered by naval men here to be a victory for the fleet.

From afloat and ashore, when the cannonading was at its height, the scene was one of grandeur. The racket woke up Newport as it was never before. The gunners in the forts, after working the big guns for a few minutes had to desert them and quickly manned the secondary batteries. The rapid firing guns made as great a din as the big ones, and if anything made the picture a livelier one. The five vessels kept in almost under Fort Adams until within short range of the torpedo station and then they appeared to anchor. The firing stopped and it was supposed the great battle was ended. In half an hour the ships suddenly steamed out of the harbor in the same order as coming in, the Brooklyn leading. The snips did not fire a gun, but Fort Adams gave them a few broadsides, and when the Brooklyn and Olympia were abreast of Beaver Tail light, Fort Grebel opened for the first time Friday night. The fleet escaped, if such was the idea, toward Rock Island.

During the battle the smaller craft were in squadron formation to seaward and did not attempt to enter the harbor. The Puritan and Indiana were not seen. As there was not time for communication between the shore and the ships the maneuvers of the fleet was mystifying. The army claims that not only would its guns have swept the ships but its mines would have wrecked some of them in the narrow channel as the escape would have been impossible for any that reached the harbor.

New London, Ct., Sept. 6.—With the night attack on Fort Adams closed the warlike maneuvers in the game which has been played in the New London and Narragansetts districts. The grand finale will be witnessed Saturday afternoon when the ships will pass in review before the forts which have been attacked, beginning at Fort Rodman and ending at Fort Terry.

Although hostilities did not cease until Saturday, it was thought at the headquarters of Gen. MacArthur Friday night that the war was over and that the morning would be utilized in getting rested and ready for the review. The rules governing the maneuvers have been so changed that there will be no exchange of salutes as the ships pass by Forts Rodman, Wetherill, Grebele, Mansard, Wright, Michie and Terry. The review will end off New London harbor and it is quite likely that most of the vessels will remain in this vicinity for several days.

Gen. MacArthur and Adm. Higginson will probably exchange courtesies either before or after the review and it is understood that this ceremony would take place at New London.

ERRATIC CURRENTS.

The Ravages of the Missouri River at St. Joseph, Mo., Causes Alarm.

St. Joseph, Mo., Sept. 6.—The ravages of the Missouri river just north of this city on large tracts of fertile bottom lands has reached such an alarming stage that a fleet of government steamers and barges has been brought into requisition for immediate action against the erratic currents. The government engineers say if this continue the river will eventually cut a new channel, leaving St. Joseph and a steel railway bridge, costing half a million dollars, high and dry.

THE CRETE-A-PIERROT.

The Vessel Captured By the German Gunboat Panther.

The Panther Then Fired on the Crete-a-Pierrot Until She Was Complete-ly Immersed—Thirty Shots All Told Were Fired.

Port Au Prince, Hayti, Sept. 8.—The German gunboat Panther arrived here September 5 and received instructions from the German government to capture the Firminist gunboat Crete-a-Pierrot. She left immediately for Gonaives, the seat of the Firminist government. The Panther found the Crete-a-Pierrot in the harbor of Gonaives and the commander of the German gunboat informed Adm. Killick, on the Crete-a-Pierrot, that he must remove his crew and surrender his vessel in five minutes. Adm. Killick asked that this time be extended to 15 minutes. This request was granted on the condition that the arms and ammunition on board the Crete-a-Pierrot should be abandoned when her crew left her.

The crew of the Crete-a-Pierrot left that vessel amid great disorder. At the end of 15 minutes the Panther sent a small boat carrying an officer and 20 sailors who were to take possession of the Firminist gunboat. When these men had arrived at a point about 30 yards from the Crete-a-Pierrot, flames were seen to break out on board her. She had been fired by her crew before they left her. The Panther then fired on the Crete-a-Pierrot until she was completely immersed. Thirty shots all told were fired.

There is much feeling here against the Firminists and their cause is considered to be a bad one. Soldiers are leaving here to attack St. Marcus. Port Au Prince is calm.

The German gunboat Panther arrived at Port Au Prince September 5. It was announced from Cape Haytien September 3 that the German steamer Markommia, Capt. Nansen, belonging to the Hamburg-American Packet Co., having on boards and ammunition sent by the provisional government to Cape Haytien had been been stopped September 7 by the Firminist gunboat Crete-a-Pierrot at the entrance to the harbor of Cape Haytien and that an armed force sent on board the steamer from the gunboat took possession of the war ammunitions in spite of the protestations of Capt. Nansen and the German consul.

CHATTANOOGA'S GUEST.

President Roosevelt Royally Entertained By the Citizens.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Sept. 7.—President Roosevelt was the guest Sunday of the citizens of Chattanooga and right royally they entertained him. He came ta Chattanooga primarily to attend the national convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, and Monday he will be the guest of the railroad men, but Sunday Chattanooga as a whole entertained him. From early morning until late Sunday he was driven from one historic place to another, and the details of the battles that have made this city famous were explained to him by men who were participants in the struggles. The battlefields of Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Orchard Knob and Lookout Mountain were driven over.

Sunday night he attended the First Baptist Church, of which Rev. J. W. Brougher is the pastor.

A very pleasing incident occurred shortly before the president resumed his inspection of the battlefield. A delegation of citizens of Georgia, headed by H. R. Harper, of Rome, presented to him a cane cut from the Chickamauga battlefield. It is of hickory, with a silver head and band suitably inscribed. On the head is the following:

"Presented to President Roosevelt by Citizens of the Seventh Congressional District of Georgia, September 7, 1902."

On the band are the names of six of the generals who participated in the battle of Chickamauga—Longstreet, Wheeler, Hood, Rosecrans, Thomas and Boynton. The 7th Georgia district was the home of President Roosevelt's mother, and he alluded to this fact in accepting the gift.

MAGAZINE BLEW UP.

One Man Killed, Five Injured and Two Missing.

Boston, Sept. 8.—One of the powder magazines at Old Fort Winthrop, on Governor's Island, upper Boston Harbor, blew up Sunday night, with a detonation that was heard at points 20 miles away. The cause of the explosion is not known.

One dead man and five injured were brought to the city by the police boat, and while it is believed that this is the extent of the casualties, it is possible that others may be found suffering from the force of the concussion.

The dead man's name is Albert H. Cotton, of Somerville. Joseph Wakefield and James Ryan are missing.

The injured are James A. Crowley, Christian Knudson, Charles Flannagan, Dennis J. Swanson and Paul Barry, all having flesh wounds besides suffering from shock.

There are several old, rambackle wooden buildings at the southerly end of the island, but the fort itself, only a little of which is visible above ground, is of stone, some of the granite blocks being of immense size.

The force of Sunday's explosion is shown by the fact that some of these great blocks were hurled several hundred yards, while one of the largest was sent out into the air and came down through the citadel in the center of the fort, making a hole, large enough to drive a team of horses through. All over the island the effects of the explosion are visible, while in East Boston, South Boston and in the city proper the concussion was severe enough to break windows and shake buildings to their foundations.

The powder exploded consisted of about six tons, and was stored in one of the numerous casemates that were built under ground around the citadel. The other casemates were empty. Each of these apartments was built with granite walls 25 feet thick and covered with earth and masonry to the depth of 35 feet. At first it was supposed the bonfire set on the island caused the explosion, but later, when the police learned that it would be impossible for fire to have reached the powder by accident from the outside, they decided that the cause is unexplained.

THE FAIRS' REMAINS.

Thy Arrive in New York on the Steamship St. Louis.

New York, Sept. 8.—In a specially constructed mortuary chapel on the upper deck of the steamship St. Louis, which reached her dock Sunday, were the bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Fair, victims of an automobile accident in France. The chapel was draped heavily in black, caught up with broad bands of white ribbon and rare floral offerings were banked around the bier in great profusion. The caskets weer consigned by Henry De Bourniol to Herman Oelrichs. They were removed to the Grand Central depot and placed on the palace car Ben Wyss, which was attached to the Chicago special.

After the ship was docked and the caskets were removed from the pier the American line officials refused to allow any one except the immediate relatives, who came to claim the bodies, to enter the chapel. It was after 9 o'clock Sunday morning when two plain black hearses with closely drawn curtains drove on the dock, followed by an ordinary public carriage. In the carriage were Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, jr., sisters of Mrs. Fair. They were met at the pier by agents of the New York Central railroad and by Col. John Jay, who attended to the details.

HIS OWN EXECUTIONER

Wm. Bartholin, Chicago Double Murderer, Suicided.

In a Pocket of the Corpse Was Found a Confession Acknowledging the Killing of His Mother and Minnie Mitchell.

Riceville, Ia., Sept. 8.—The body which was buried here Saturday morning and which was believed to be that of William Bartholin was exhumed Sunday and positively identified as that of the Chicago double murderer. The identification was made by Wm. Mitchell, a brother of Bartholin's murdered sweetheart, and Lieut. Andrew Rohan, of Chicago, who arrived here Saturday morning from Chicago. Dr. A. J. Coey, of Chicago, Bartholin's dentist, who came here with Lieut. Rohan, cut out the lower jaw of the dead murderer, which contained the two gold crown teeth which have figured so largely in the description sent broadcast throughout the country for purposes of identification. The jaw will be taken to Chicago. Bartholin's body was found last Friday about six miles from Riceville by J. C. Pratt, of Riceville. Pratt was driving to Elma and when passing a flax field saw the body lying against a stack of flax. Thinking it was a man asleep, he paid no attention at first, but on returning he found the man still there, and upon investigation, discovered that he was dead, and a revolver lying near his left hand. Coroner T. S. Carpenter was notified, and the body was removed to an undertaking establishment at Riceville. There J. B. Cook, editor of a Riceville paper, discovered that the dead man bore a striking resemblance to the published pictures of the Chicago murderer.

The text of the confession left by the suicide, as made public by Dr. T. S. Carpenter, coroner of Howard county, follows:

"To whom it may concern: I want to state I am the Bartholin the police are looking for. Also wish to certify I had no assistance of any kind from any one. Thompson, Claffy and Counselman are all as innocent as an unborn child and should be freed at once.

"I can not go into detail in regard to the crimes. They were not planned. It was all Minnie and I could do. My mind is wandering. Such a drop in life in a short time. Two months ago traveling in the best of company; today living the life of hoboes, a murderer.

"I intended to go into details and tell all, but I can not get my mind centered. Even my handwriting is disgraceful.

"But above all things, I ask you to clear everybody under suspicion. There is no second party; I am the last. W. J. Bartholin."

It transpires that Bartholin came to Riceville August 6, before the bodies of his victims, Mrs. Bartholin, his mother, and Miss Mitchell, his sweetheart, was discovered.

WILLIAM N. ROACH DEAD.

He Was United States Senator From North Dakota From 1893 to 1899.

New York, Sept. 8.—William Nathaniel Roach, who was United States senator from North Dakota from 1892 to 1899, died here Sunday. He had been ill from cancer almost from his coming to this city, where he had made his home after retiring from the senate. Under special treatment here he progressed favorably and about a month ago it was announced that he was out of danger. He suffered a relapse, however, and died after having been confined to his bed for months.

William N. Roach was born in Washington September 25, 1840. He was graduated from Georgetown university. He served as a clerk in the United States quartermaster's department during the civil war. He removed to Dakota territory in 1879 and having secured mail contracts, established a number of overland mail routes. He was the mayor of Larimore from 1883 to 1887. Mr. Roach was twice the democratic nominee for governor but was defeated on both occasions.

Richardson and their brother-in-law, Mr. Waltenberger, on the other, in which the elder Whaley was killed and Alf, his son, had both arms shot to pieces, and J. A. Richardson received a severe flesh wound in the thigh. There has been trouble between the Whaleys and Richardsons for the past two months, and the two parties met on the highway.

A BAND OF BANDITS.

They Were Routed By a Detachment of Native Constabulary.

Manila, Sept. 6.—Rios, a fanatical leader of the irreconcilable natives in the province of Tayabas, Luzon, attacked the town of Lagulmanoc September 2 at the head of 30 riflemen and 150 men armed with bolos. The band wantonly killed two women and one girl and wounded several other persons. A detachment of the native constabulary arrived unexpectedly at Lagulmanoc while Rios' men were still there. They attacked and routed the bandits, killing several of Rios' followers and rounded up 700 men, many of whom are suspected of complicity in the attack on Lagulmanoc. The guilty ones among the 700 men will be picked out and the remainder set at liberty.

One of Rios' lieutenants who was captured said Rios was a direct descendant of God and that it was beyond the power of man to injure him.

The constabulary have also captured one of Rios' mountain strongholds. Four detachments of constabulary are now following the main body of the outlaws.

PROF. VIRCHOW DEAD.

The papers also praise his humanitarian activity in improving the Berlin hospitals and other sanitary institutions and the liberal organs extol his political activity and unswerving liberalism.

His regiment was recently ordered home and in order to remain in the civil service in the Philippines it was necessary for him to give up his military commission. Gov. Taft urged him to remain as he needed his services, and when the matter was presented to Gen. Chaffee, commanding the military division, he approved the officer's letter of resignation.

STATE NEWS PICK-UPS.

THE GROOM MISSING.

A. S. Hamilton Failed to Materialize at His Wedding at Owensboro.

Owensboro, Ky., Sept. 4.—The wedding of Miss Nora Gordon, a young society girl of this city, and A. S. Hamilton, of Louisville, which was announced to take place at the Third Baptist church here at 8 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, was not solemnized, as the groom failed to arrive. The ceremony was to be performed by Rev. P. T. Hale, the pastor of the church, and many friends had purchased wedding gifts for the couple.

Late in the afternoon, when asked about the affair, Miss Gordon, who was almost prostrated, said that Mr. Hamilton came to Louisville Sunday to see her, and returned to Louisville Tuesday morning, saying that he had given his mother a check for some money, and that he had forgotten to sign it. He had to go to sign it, and would return Tuesday night at 9 o'clock. He failed to come.

It is said by members of the Gordon family that about two weeks ago, while on his way to New York, young Hamilton became ill and had to be taken to a sanitarium at Syracuse, N. Y. He escaped from there last Friday night, they say, and came here Sunday. They believe that he is sick again, though they have not heard a word from him or his family.

Hamilton, of Louisville, the young man who was to marry Miss Nora Gordon, of this city, Wednesday, and who failed to appear, has written a letter to Ira Gordon, the father of Miss Gordon. The letter is postmarked St. Louis. Hamilton says that he does not know why he has acted as he has. He says that when he engaged himself to marry Miss Nora he was expecting to receive a large sum of money, and in this he was disappointed. He says he is miserable, and will end his life. He says he loves Miss Gordon dearly, and that he feels he is the meanest creature on earth.

Miss Gordon is almost prostrated, and the family much distressed.

The four engines and about 20 cars of merchandise were piled in a promiscuous heap of wreckage. The trainmen jumped and none were hurt. The engineers were Tom McGann, Henry Stevens, Sam Love and Wm. Fahey. Non-attention to orders is alleged to be the cause.

The body was fearfully mutilated.

Jackson, Ky., Sept. 5.—A bloody fight took place ten miles from here, at the mouth of Frozen creek, Thursday morning, between Charles T. Byrd, of this place, backed by some friends, and a gang led by "Red" Geo. Smith, in which Smith was killed and a man named Nuckles wounded. Byrd had gone to the place on business and took with him some friends, anticipating trouble with Smith and his friends, who had threatened him on account of his defense of Logan Bohannan, who had killed Elbannan Smith two months ago. The men opened fire on each other at first sight, but the lawyer proved the best marksman, and his enemy fell with two bullet holes in his body.

Took a Dose of Acid.

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 6.—[illegible] her mother and brother had [illegible] with her for receiving the [illegible] of a young man, Lizzie [illegible], aged 18, took a [illegible] of carbolic acid.

A few weeks ago Charles Litton, the well known tobacco buyer of Cynthiana, sold a crop of fancy burley leaf (gazette wrappers) in the Cincinnati market at the record breaking price of $45 25 per 100 pounds, a figure that had been equaled but once since the time of high prices during the great Civil War. The record was again smashed last Wednesday by Frank Congleton, a prominent shipper of Carlisle, at the Farmers and Shippers' Warehouse in the sale of a single hogshead, which brought $49 per 100. The competition for the package was one of the fiercest struggles between bidders ever witnessed on the Cincinnati breaks, the American Tobacco Company, the Universal Tobacco Company and Brokers John A. Downard and S. W. Coffman being the principal bidders, the latter finally securing it. Good judges pronounced it without exception the finest hogshead of fancy leaf ever stripped in this or any other market.

A glut of the potato market is threatened, according to a report from the Northwest, the great potato-growing section. In Minneapolis and St. Paul potatoes have already sold as low as 18c a bushel, while there is a well grounded belief that within the next few days they will go as low as 15c a bushel. The reason is found in the fact that last year, while the potato growers of the country as a rule met with a partial or complete failure of the crop, the Northern growers had a good crop, which they were able to dispose of at very remunerative prices. As a result every farmer in Minnesota put in a large area of the tubers this year, and at the present prices may declare that they are not worth digging as the cost of digging and taking to market exceeds the price which can be obtained for them. While prices have not gone so slow in this city as yet, the tubers are lower than has been the case in years, and the prices may fall even lower. The apple market, too, is good, except in this section, while the chance of corn producing a full crop is unusually good. Oats are yielding heavily, though injured in many instances by rain which fell while the grain was in the shock. Seed clover will make a fair crop, late vegetables are doing well. The grape crop over the country is suffering somewhat from gray rot, but the Ohio growers have not suffered much from it as yet.

There is evidently an increasing demand on the part of the agriculturalist for government seed as the information comes from Washington that forty million packages of seeds, weighing about 1,000 tons, will be distributed by the Agricultural Department this fiscal year. This will be the largest annual distribution made by the government, and it will cost in the neighborhood of $270,000. Most of the seeds will be of miscellaneous vegetables and fruits. Then there will be flower, cotton and tobacco seed, in addition to several varieties of new seeds which the department calls novelties.

Each Senator and Representative in Congress is credited with 12,000 packages of vegetable seeds, each package containing five packets; he will also receive 500 packages of the novelties and 500 packages of flower seeds. Out of the department's own allowance over 700,000 packages of flower and vegetable seeds will be sent to its county correspondents in different States and Territories who furnish the department with monthly crop reports, while over 800,000 packages of vegetable, flower and field seeds will be sent to the State Grange Associations throughout the country.

Aside from all this distribution thousands of packages of foreign seeds and plants which are being introduced by the departments experts abroad will be sent out to State agricultural colleges and such reliable cultivators as have shown a willingness to co-operate with the department. Secretary Wilson has determined also to distribute young trees with the hope of imbuing the public with a deeper interest in this kind of cultivation.

An important difference between dairy farming and grain farming is the amount of the farm that is sold with the product that is of the fertility of the farm. The man who sells a ton of wheat sells in it about $7 worth of fertilizing elements, and if he does not buy something to replace them his farm is so much poorer. The dairyman who sells a ton of butter has sold but fifty cents worth of fertilizing material, and if he is a good dairyman he has probably added much more than that, or twenty times that to the value of the farm in the bran, oil meal, cotton seed or other food that he purchased while feeding his cows for making that ton of butter. It is in this way that the dairyman's [illegible]

There's a man in McVille afraid his name or some of his family will get into the papers. He surely will not be offended if I state that he has quit the river and gone back to his trade, that of carpenter, and is working with John Presser. Johnny P. and Charley B. are good workmen and hustlers from away back. Anyone needing anything in their line will do well to call on them.

Feeling indisposed, and being disposed to do something for my indisposition, I went to Bellevue, Tuesday evening to get some bitter stuff, and on to McVille and spent the night with a friend. If a gent or lady is out on the street at the hour of midnight it is taken for granted, by the night police, that the gentleman is returning from a visit to his best girl, and the lady from watching at the bedside of a sick friend or neighbor, and each are allowed to pass on unmolested.

Hence his arrest, trial at Walton, and being held over to the grand jury. One of the cockerels stolen was valued at $35. The chickens have not all been recovered. Some of our citizens favored giving Coleman a "hoist" to where chicken thieves go, but cooler heads prevailed.

Mr. Henry Dixon was instantly killed, last Saturday at 6 p. m; at his residence. Mr. Dixon been painting the roof of his veranda, and had nearly completed it and laid aside his brushes, and it is believed he had started to climb down, when he lost his footing and fell to the ground, a distance of 12 feet, his head striking a rock, fracturing his skull. When discovered he was dead. He was 82 years of age, an honest and noble man, having no enemies, and making a friend of everyone with whom he met. He was a member of the Lutheran church for many years. He leaves six children, Mrs. Jennie Dobbins, Mrs. Julia Smith, Mrs. Ada Surface, Mrs. Effie Hogrifle and William and Everett Dixon. The funeral services were conducted at Hopeful at 11 a. m., Monday, by Rev. Slater, and the remains were laid to rest by the side of his good and faithful wife, who preceded him to the grave six years. IMPRINTED STAMPS.

Hundreds of Tons of Them Returned to Internal Revenue Bureau Office.

Washington, Sept. 11.—Commissioner Yerkes, of the internal revenue bureau, has been compelled to rent an outside building in which to receive and store checks and drafts bearing imprinted stamps now being sent in for redemption. The original act provided for the redemption of these imprinted stamps, limited the time within which they could be presented for redemption to two years from the time they were purchased from the government. Subsequently that time was extended to January 1, 1904. Almost immediately after the act was passed banks and large business houses began sending in their surplus stocks and in a short time the quantity had reached the point where the weight threatened the walls of the rooms and corridors where they were stored, necessitating a prompt removal. Up to this time 194 tons have been destroyed or returned to the senders after cancellation and there are now about 60 tons on hand, with the daily receipts almost equaling the cancellations.

PACKING HOUSE TEAMSTERS.

They Renew Their Fight Against the Stock Yards Concerns.

Chicago, Sept. 11.—Packing house teamsters renewed their fight against the stock yards concerns Wednesday night at a meeting of the union. It is the avowed intention to order a strike of the 600 drivers employed by Swift & Co., and a struggle which may reach the dimensions of the strike of three months ago is said to be one of the probabilities of the near future.

The trouble is the result of the alleged refusal of Swift & Co. to live up to the agreement reached last May establishing a minimum wage of 15 cents an hour.

THE CAVALRY CHARGE.

Gens. Young and Wood Took Part in German Army Movement.

About 9,000 Horseman, Lancers, Cuirassiers and Dragons Fell Upon the Flank of the Retreating Blues (Defending Army).

Frankfort-On-the-Oder, Sept. 12.—Maj. Gen. Young and Brig. Gen. Wood and their aides-de-camp, Lieuts. McKinley and McCoy, charged with the cavalry, led by Emperor William, Thursday.

The Americans did not draw their swords, but they rose with the gard du corps, one of the household regiments and the emperor's bodyguard. This charge was the climax of the maneuvers. About 9,000 horsemen, lancers, curriassiers and dragons fell upon the flank of the retreating blues (defending army), capturing 30 of the latter's guns and 2,000 of the infantry. The cavalry started at daylight, made a 12 mile curve and at about half past 8 swept over rolling meadows and upon the enemies forces, which had been theoretically disorganized by a heavy infantry attack. The 9,000 cavalrymen made a frontage of a mile and a half and in the sunday over the open country they rushed at a hard gallop upon the artillery and infantry, which did not cease firing until the horsemen were near at hand. When the cavalry were within 100 yards, the infantry quickly formed into close platoon groups, which the horsemen broke up, galloping between the groups and the guns. Several horses fell dead. The emperor, mounted on a white Arab horse, directed the movements, and at the finish galloped ahead as recklessly as any trooper. The empress was present on horseback. Maj. Gen. Corbin and Lieut. Col. John A. Johnston, Earl Roberts and other foreign guests were on a hill, around which the charge was made. Gen. Corbin said it was the finest military spectacle he ever saw.

Emperor William's customary salute to the Americans has been "Well, how's the khaki brigade?" His majesty has been disposed to chaff the Americans a little. Thursday they wore blue fatigue uniforms. His sharp eye noted the change and he remarked pleasantly upon it.

The Zeitung, commenting upon the simplicity of the American uniforms, said: "The American visitors have no necessity for uniforms to make them look like soldiers."

Chicago, Sept. 12.—The long-expected merger of the great meat packing interests of the United States will go into active and open operation Saturday, September 27, unless there should be an entirely unlooked for change in the plans agreed upon by all those concerned in the deal at a meeting held here Thursday. THE BEAUMONT OIL FIELD.

A Destructive Fire is Raging on Spindle Top and Spreading.

Beaumont, Tex., Sept. 12.—The oil field is on fire and judging by the great volume of smoke which is flowing in from Spindle Top there is grave danger that great loss will be sustained, if the field is not entirely destroyed. The fire started early Thursday evening in some waste oil alongside the Texas & Sabine tracks and burned about sixty feet of trestle. This was gotten under control and it was believed that all danger had passed, but in some way the fire had been communicated to the field and a number of huge settling tanks, containing thousands of barrels of petroleum, have already exploded and others are reported as being in the direct line of the fire, which has spread over a wide area already. The ground is saturated with oil and there was no chance for stopping the progress of the flames Thursday night.

At 2 o'clock Friday morning the agent at Gladys telegraphed that the flames seem to have remained nearly stationary during the last 30 minutes, and unless there are further explosions of oil tanks they may confined to the present burning district. The tank known as the Higgins has blown off its top and the burning oil is running along the ground and may reach other tanks.

THROWN FROM AUTO.

Mrs. Senator Stewart Killed at Alameda, Cal.

Her Nephew and His Companion, Who Were With Her, Escaped With Bruises—Senator Stewart is in The Hague.

San Francisco, Sept. 13.—Mrs. Wm. M. Stewart, wife of Senator Stewart, of Novada, was thrown from an automobile and killed at Alameda, Cal. Mrs. Stewart was riding in an automobile with Henry Foote and a young man named Taylor. Through an accident the machine ran into a telegraph pole. Mrs. Stewart was thrown against the pole with great force and soon died. Her home was at Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Stewart was enjoying a ride with her nephew, Henry Foote, son of W. W. Foote, an attorney, and H. B. Taylor. They were going along Santa Clara avenue, in Alameda county, Taylor guiding the machine and sending it along at high speed. A vehicle approached and Taylor swerved the motor in order to avoid a collision. At that moment he lost control of the steering apparatus or made a miscalculation. The automobile ran into a telegraph pole and the occupants were thrown out. Mrs. Stewart struck her head and was carried, in an unconscious condition, to a sanitarium in the vicinity, where she soon died. Foote and Taylor escaped with slight bruises.

Taylor is a cousin of Frederick Benedict, who was recently crushed to death under his automobile in New York. Mrs. Stewart was visiting her sister, Mrs. Louis Aldrich, who lives in San Francisco.

Washington, Sept. 13. — Senator Stewart is at present at The Hague in connection with the Pius fund arbitration in which he has taken a deep interest. The case involves title to a large amount of money claimed by the Catholic church of Lower California to be held for it by the government of Mexico. It was due largely to the senator's efforts that the claim was submitted to the arbitration of the distinguished European tribunal now engaged on its settlement.

The Senator and Mrs. Stewart since the sale of their old home on Dupont circle, known as Stewart's castle, to Senator Clark, of Montana, and its subsequent destruction, had lived in the winter time in an old-fashioned residence on F street near the state, war and navy department building. In the summer time they spent more or less time at Ashburn, a village in Virginia, where the senator had established a large dairy farm which he ran on scientific and sanitary principles. Of late years they had not taken so much interest in social affairs as formerly.

Mrs. Stewart, before her marriage, was a Miss Foote, the daughter of Henry Stuart Foote, governor and United States senator from Mississippi before the civil war, and who, during the fifties spent some years in California. Senator and Mrs. Stewart have several daughters, one of whom lives in New York city.

COSTLY FOREST FIRES.

Much Property Destroyed and Several Lives Lost.

A Great Fire is Raging on the Coweman, Everything Combustible is Being Consumed—Air Thick With Smoke and Ashes.

Kalama, Wash., Sept. 15.—D. L. Wallace, wife and two children were burned to death Saturday night by the forest fires on Lewis river. They were camping in the woods when caught by the fire. Their wagon was found burned up, the charred bodies lying near.

Five logging camps are burned out completely. The following families have lost everything: Eliza Street, C. S. Curtis, L. M. Child, Thomas Matthews, T. Wilkerson, H. E. Dartland, Dr. Ellis and others. The worst of the fire is on Lewis river about 12 miles above Woodland. The country is well settled and there are doubtless other casualties not yet reported.

The fire has spread from [illegible] to the Kalama river and 50 sections of the finest timber on the coast are destroyed. It is impossible to give any estimate of the amount of damage done to property. Oak Point, 20 miles below here on the Columbia river is totally destroyed. There are no reports of lives lost, but loss to property is estimated at about $300,000.

A great fire is also raging on the Coweman, in the northern part of the county. Everything combustible was consumed. The air is thick with smoke and falling ashes. Many lumber camps are reported destroyed or badly damaged. Two men from Barr's camp are reported missing, and people are panic-stricken. In Cowlitz county five people are dead and two missing with incomplete reports. A courier just arrived states that there are only two houses left standing on Lewis river in a distance of 30 miles and that not less than 15 persons perished.

Portland, Ore., Sept. 15.—About 300 people are left homeless in Multnomah and Clackamas counties as a result of the forest fires that have raged for the past week. Fires have burned over a wide scope of country, but the greatest damage in this state appears to have been done in these two counties. In the fire that destroyed the town of Palmer, near Bridal Veil, two boys named Hamilton were burned to death.

The most distressing losses have been those suffered in the vicinity of Springwater, Clackamas county, and Lentz, Multnomah county. The Springwater region has been utterly swept by the fires and those who have reached points in communication with the outside world say that immediate help must be sent in order to save the lives rescued from the devouring flames.

The damage by fire to forest reservations appears not to have been heavy, the most disastrous fires being confined to settlements where clearing and slashing is being done. There is no way of securing a correct estimate of the loss, but it certainly will exceed $1,000,000 in this state.

RIOS' BAND OF BANDITS.

Eighteen Were Killed and 25 Captured By the Native Constabulary.

Manila, Sept. 15.—On account of the impoverishment of the people by war and cholera, the United States Philippine commission has remitted the land tax in the province of Batangas, Luzon, for the year 1902.

The force of native constabulary which has been in pursuit of the Rios band of irreconcilables in Tayabas province, Luzon, has killed 18 and captured 25 of the bandits. The constabulary encountered the band upon four different occasions during the chase, but suffered no losses whatever.

Rios, the leader of the bandits, says he will never be captured alive.

Manila, Sept. 15.—"Capt. Bilo," a leader of ladrones in Bulacan province, Luzon, who is guilty of 30 murders, and who has been an outlaw for years, was killed by the native constabulary last Friday. Bilo was surrounded, but refused to surrender. The constabulary then shot him to death.

THE COMING FIGHT.

Effort Will Be Made By State Authorities to Stop It.

Frankfort, Ky., Sept. 15.—Gov. Beckham determined Sunday that legal steps should be taken to prevent the proposed contest between Young Corbett and Terry McGovern before the Southern Athletic club at Louisville a week from Monday if it is to be a prize fight and in violation of the Kentucky laws. He on Monday handed to Attorney General Clifton J. Pratt a letter requesting him to at once institute proceedings to determine whether the contest is to a prize fight or only a boxing contest, which is permitted. The proceedings, so the governor and attorney general determined, will be an injunction suit filed in the Jefferson circuit court Monday, seeking to restrain the Southern Athletic club from allowing the fight to be given under its auspices. The case will be heard in the lower court immediately and appealed to the court of appeals for final decision. The decision will be reached in ample time to prevent the fight if it is held to be in violation of the Kentucky laws on the subject.

WINFIELD S. STRATTON.

The Millionaire Mining Man Died at Colorado Springs, Col.

Colorado Springs, Col., Sept. 15.—Winfield S. Stratton, the millionaire mining man, died at 9:30 o'clock Sunday night.

Mr. Stratton had been ill for several months. He had been in a critical condition for several weeks and his death was expected at any time Sunday. He had been unconscious throughout the day and the relatives, including a sister, Mrs. Jennie Cobb, of San Jose, Cal., who is the only near relative who survives Mr. Stratton, did not leave his bedside at any time.

Mr. Stratton was born in Jeffersonville, Ind., in 1848. After an education in the city schools he mastered the carpenter's trade. He went to Colorado Springs in 1872 and had since been a resident of this city. For 30 years, more or less, he had been interested in mining, being a prospector in various Colorado camps before he opened the famous Independence Bonanza.

Mr. Stratton's private charities were boundless and his interest in the public welfare was almost without limit. He was the owner of the Colorado Springs street railway system. His wealth is estimated at $15,000,000.

Chicago, Sept. 15.—The color line has been drawn at Northwestern university and no negroes will be admitted to the young woman's dormitories of the institution. The Women's Educational association, which has general supervision of the several halls in which the girls live, has passed on the matter after many stormy meetings, and the faction in favor of drawing the color line won by a decisive majority.

The controversy over the question began a year ago, when a young woman living in Texas engaged a room in Chapin Hall. When she arrived at the beginning of the scholastic year to occupy it, it was learned for the first time that she was colored.

The question over the admission of colored young women at once became an issue among the members of the educational association, and its agitation has not yet ceased.

MEMORIAL SERVICES.

First Anniversary of the Death of President McKinley Observed.

Many Churches Exhibited Emblems of Mourning and Also the National Flag—Addresses on Life and Character Delivered.

Canton, O., Sept. 15.—Judge William R. Day delivered the chief McKinley memorial day address here Sunday in the First M. E. church, of which the late president was a member and in which the funeral was held September 19, 1901.

The only decorations were flowers and a portrait of the late president, around which were the folds of the stars and stripes, emblematic of the patriotic spirit of McKinley.

In addition to the tribute paid by Judge Day, who was secretary of state in McKinley's cabinet, and a close friend and adviser to the martyred president, there was a general observance of the day in Canton, which claimed him as its own. From almost every pulpit there was reference in prayer or address to him and his work. His favorite hymns were used. In the Catholic churchee of the city special mase was said.

Although deeply conscious of the fact that it was just one year ago that her husband died, Mrs. McKinley did not vary the programme followed by her for several months. All days to her have been memorial days. Her usual trip to Westlawn cemetery was taken Sunday forenoon and she laid love's offering of flowers on the casket that contains the remains of the nation's martyred chief.

Washington, Sept. 15.—The anniversary of the death of President McKinley was marked by some tender and sincere mention of him in nearly every church in Washington. In many of them were exhibited emblems of mourning and also the national flag.

Secretaries Wilson and Hitchcock and Secretary Cortelyon attended the services at the Metropolitan M. E. church, where President McKinley worshipped. Over the marble tablet placed to the memory of the late president was placed a laurel wreath. His pew was unoccupied.

At the church where President Roosevelt worships, the Grace Reformed church, Rev. John M. Schick, its pastor, conducted memorial services and eulogized the dead president.

Cincinnati, Sept. 15.—Services were held in all of the leading churches in Cincinnati Sunday commemorating the first anniversary of McKinley's death. Many of the sermons held up McKinley's life as an ideal of American citizenship and as one that all Americans should emulate. The services were well attended and McKinley's favorite flower, the pink carnation, was much in evidence.

New York, Sept. 15.—The first anniversary of the death of President McKinley was specially observed in a large number of the churches of this city, while it was referred to by the pastors of almost all the others.

Rev. Charles L. Thompson preached at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church on religious elements of national strength. This is the church which President McKinley attended when his visits to this city included Sunday. In this church, as in all the others, the hymns, "Lead, Kindly Light" and "Nearer, My God, to Thee," were included in the program of congregational singing.

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 15.—The anniversary of the death of William McKinley was universally observed in this city Sunday. The pastors in all the churches paid tributes to the memory of the martyred president, and the congregations sang his favorite hymns, "Nearer, My God, to Thee" and "Lead, Kindly Light," were sung by the worshipers in small chapels and missions and gloriously intoned on the great organs in the larger churches, seemingly with special significance and fervor.

In the afternoon a public meeting was held in the city convention hall.

Chicago, Sept. 15.—Chicago paid an impressive tribute Sunday to the memory of William McKinley. Throughout the city from platform and pulpit men of all nationalities and all creeds lauded the life and deeds of the martyred president whose death occurred one year Sunday. His nobility of character, purity of home life, solidity of statesmanship and greatness of heart were subjects for outpourings of eloquence from clergy and laity.

A NIGHT CONFERENCE.

Gov. Stone, Prominent Mine Workers and Others Discuss Strike Situation.

Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 13.—A conference was held at the executive mansion after midnight between Gov. Stone, State Senator William Flynn and M. K. McMullin, of Pittsburg, President Mitchell and District Presidents Duffy, Fahey and Nichols, of the United Mine Workers, for the purpose of discussing means of settling the anthracite coal strike. The conference was held at the suggestion of the governor, who had devised a plan by which he hopes to effect a settlement between the operators and miners without the necessity of an extra session of the legislature for the enactment of arbitration legislation.

The governor declined to outline his plan in advance of the conference and none of the other parties to it would make any statement until after they had concluded their talk. The conference did not begin until after midnight, owing to the late hour at which President Mitchell and his associates arrived here from Philadelphia.

The governor originally arranged for a meeting Saturday with Mitchell, but the strike leader had an important engagement at Wilkesbarre Saturday and asked that the governor meet him Friday night and the executive cheerfully complied with his request.

Senator Flynn, aside from his political prominence in Pennsylvania, is one of the largest individual employers of labor, and he has never had a strike. Mr. McMullin is at the head of the American Window Glass Co.

District Presidents Duffy and Fahey arrived at 3:30 o'clock Saturday morning and the entire party sat down to lunch in the dining room of the executive mansion.

At 4:30 o'clock the conference ended and the following statement was handed to the newspaper correspondents:

"Messrs. Mitchell, Nichols, Fahey, Duffy, Senator Flynn, Col. Richardson and Gov. Stone have been in conference and the differences have been discussed with the best feeling."

Gov. Stone and Senator Flynn would not be seen after the conference ended and went immediately to bed. Mr. McMullin, President Mitchell and the three district presidents refused to talk. Each said that all he had to say was contained in the statement. Mr. Mitchell would not even say whether the conference was satisfactory to him. The national president and Presidents Duffy and Fahey left for Wilkesbarre on the mail train at 4:40 a. m. President Nichols remained here.

BOISY BRYANT HANGED.

The Daughter of the Murdered Officer Witnessed the Execution.

The crime for which Bryant was hanged was committed at Adel, Ga., last May. The Negro was wanted in the town on a misdemeanor charge and Town Marshal Hynds attempted to arrest him. Louisville, Ky., Sept. 12.—A mass meeting, attended by about eight hundred citizens, was held in Music hall Thursday night to protest against the fight between Terry McGovern and Young Corbett, which is scheduled to take place at the Auditorium in this city September 22. Speeches were made denouncing the fight by a number of prominent laymen and preachers and resolutions were adopted calling upon Gov. Beckham and Attorney General Pratt, of Kentucky; Mayor Grainger, of Louisville, and the sheriff and all constables and justices of the peace in Jefferson county to do all in their power to prevent the fight from taking place in Louisville. It was also suggested that in case the officials refused to act, warrants should be sworn out against the principals and an injunction secured to stop the fight. A committee of ten, headed by Helm Bruce, a prominent attorney, was appointed to take any legal action that might be found advisable.

Powell, who, as chairman of the ministers' committee, asked that the coming Corbett-McGovern fight be prevented. Dr. Powell, who also wrote to Gov. Beckham, received the following from Edward O. Leigh, the governor's private secretary:

"I am directed by the governor to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 10th inst. The matter will receive his very careful consideration."

And this is all the encouragement the anti-fight element can get.

W. L. RIDDELL, - - Publisher.

For Circuit Clerk.

We are authorised to announce S. E. TERRELL, of Idlewild, as a candidate for Circuit Court Clerk, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

THE late Robert J. Blackburn, of Sherman, Grant county, left five sons, each of whom is cashier of a bank, the last one having been recently elected cashier of the bank soon to begin business at Independence.

SOME of the Democrats in Covington are anxious that the city ticket this fall be composed entirely of business men against whom no objections can be urged. A ticket of that kind in Covington would be a novelty.

THE President is delighted with the reception he was given while in the South. In what section of this great country is its Chief Magistrate not entitled to a hearty welcome, and in every section he appears he is sure to receive the respect due the exalted position he occupies. That is as it should be.

President Roosevelt's speeches upon the trust problem are having a panicky effect upon such Republicans as are intent on subordinating the trust issue this fall. On the other hand, the Democrats at the congressional headquarters are reading his utterances with glee, for they have put that issue to the front this year and are demanding remedial legislation for the trust evil.

THE factions or the Democratic party in Covington have renewed hostilities, and the Republicans are confidently expecting to win an easy victory this fall in the city election, and at the same time see Judge Paynter badly knifed. The county Democrats should turn out and give Paynter a heavy vote, thoroughly overcoming his loss because of the local troubles in Covington.

THREE columns of the last issue of the Williamstown Courier were devoted to the advertisement of the public sale of the real estate and personal property of J. H. Westover, until recently editor and owner of the Courier. When it comes to the list of household goods the advertisement reads like that of a first class furniture store that is closing out business. Sale September 20th. Mr. Westover says he has decided to locate in another State, which he assigns as his reason for selling out.

AS soon as the die-proof of the first of the new series of United States postage stamps is approved by the Postmaster-General plates will be made and the stamp issued to the public. Its denomination is 13 cents, Benjamin Harris occupies the center of the field. This will be the first thirteen-cent stamp ever issued by the United States; up to 1879 a stamp of the value of seven cents had been in use ten years, but was discontinued when the rate of foreign postage was reduced to five cents. The new Harrison stamp will be little used in domestic mails. Its issuance is the outgrowth of the increased foreign registration service.

THE summary of Kentucky crop conditions, issued the first of this month is as follows: Drouth damaged corn considerably in a great many localities, so that the prospect which obtained earlier in the season for an excessive yield is altered and not more than an average crop is expected. It has improved in the extreme western counties, but has deteriorated in many localities in other parts of the State. Early corn is maturing rapidly and some has been cut. The late planted has suffered from the recent drouth, but with favorable conditions it will yield well. The condition of tobacco has not altered very much; the crop will be short. The growth is small and many plants are fired. Cutting and housing has progressed rapidly, the weather being very favorable for that work. Hemp is very good and most of it has been cut. Pasture grasses and clover fields have suffered very much for rain. A medium crop of millet is being harvested. Stock peas, cane and sorghum are doing well in most localities. Late potatoes, turnips and late gardens need rain badly. There is a short crop of winter apples of inferior quality; some pears and grapes, but scarcely any peaches. Plowing for winter grains has been carried on where the conditions of soil permitted. Some oats have been sown.

THE Internal Revenue Bureau has been compelled to rent an outside building in which to receive and store checks and drafts bearing imprinted stamps now being sent in for redemption. The original act providing for the redemption of these imprinted stamps limited the time within which they could be presented for redemption to two years from the time they were purchased from the Government. Subsequently that time was extenedd to January 1, 1904. Almost immediately after the act was passed banks and large business houses began sending in their surplus stocks, and in a short time the quantity had reached the point where the weight threatened the walls of the rooms and corridors where they were stored, necessitating a prompt removal. Up to this time 194 tons have been destroyed or returned to the senders after cancellation, and there are now about 60 tons on hand, with the daily receipts almost equaling cancellations.

THAT a people superior in intelligence to those of the earth inhabit the planet Mars is a conclusion that will be set forth by Prof. G. W. Hough, head of the department of Astronomy of the Northwestern University, in a report, which he is compiling of his summer's observations from the Dearbon University. He asserts this probability is based on recent discoveries, and adds that of course, it can never be established positively. The conclusion includes the acceptance of the theory of evolution and the statements of leading astronomers that climatic conditions of Mars are the same as the earth. The possibility of Venus and Mercury being inhabited is admitted because they have solidified, and the intense heat resulting from their proximity to the sun may have been overcome by a deeper covering of atmosphere. None of the other planets, in the opinion of the professor, could contain animal life. The professor is doing business a long ways from home.

THERE is good reason for the pride which Southern papers are exhibiting over the great increase in the cotton manufacturing interests of the South. There have been many prophecies regarding the future of this industry. Growth within the past few years justifies the most roseate expectations. At the present time the average cottoac crop in the United States is about 10,000,000 bales. A little more than 40 per cent of this cotton is retailed for manufacture in this country. Of the total, Northern mills will use 2,290,000 bales, while Southern mills will take 1,865,000. Seven years ago the ratio was different. In 1895 Northern mills used 2,119,000 bales and Southern mills 852,000. At this rate seven more years will find the Southern mills taking 4,000,000 bales, against 1,600,000 bales to the North. Many newspapers in the South predict that with this practically sure growth and the natural increase of trade which will follow the completion of the isthmian canal, the manufacturing interests of the United States will be centered south of Mason and Dixon's line. The South has only begun to feel the impetus of the new commercial spirit.

The Legislature of Mississippi will probably be asked to consider a bill to prohibit the game of baseball between the 1st of September and the close of each year. The reason given for this is rather peculiar. It is said that when the season for cotton picking arrives the negroes become profoundly interested in baseball. In one little town the other day nine games of baseball were in progress at one time thereby taking 165 men from the cotton fields, without counting the spectators. As the negroes keep their ball teams organized the year round in some of the cotton regions, it is held that they can get enough of the game in eight months of the year. But if baseball be prohibited, probably those who are not anxious to work will find some other way of amusing themselves during the picking season. —Courier Journal.

IN some sections English sparrows have become so destructive of crops of grain that the farmers are asking for suggestions of plans for their destruction. Col. Isaac W. Brown, the bird and bee man says, if prompt steps are not taken to destroy the English sparrows, in three years' time all political and other questions will have to be dropped and the one great question will be the destruction of the sparrows. Unless kept within limits it will not be possible to raise small grain.

Later [illegible] Lincoln, Neb. Riding on horseback he saw two men fighting. Leaping to the ground he separated the combatants, and one of them immediately attacked him with a revolver in one hand and a knife in the other, and then a struggle ensued. The stranger was frenzied with liquor and the excitement of the previous combat, and Mr. Bryan was almost overpowered when John Burke, a barber, came to his assistance and the two speedily had the enraged man on the ground and disarmed. Those present wanted the man turned over to the police, but Mr. Bryan advised letting him go.

THE growth of the sheep industry in the Rocky Mountain States in the last quarter of a century has been enormous, says the Portland (Ore.) Oregonian. It was in fact, been created in that section within that period, this being especially the case in Montana, which State, as will be shown by special reports soon to be published by the Department of Agriculture, now leads in sheep raising and the production of wool. About 25 years ago the first band of sheep was taken into Montana, and this small flock has increased until now, according to the department's figures, there are over 6,200,000 sheep in the State. In the year 1901 there were 8,000,000 lambs added to the flocks of Montana, and 14,000,000 pounds of wool were produced at an average of 13.48 cents a pound.

Six cities, Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Chicago and St. Louis, now contain in the aggregate over 350,000 negroes. It takes the largest eleven cities further south to match this number—New Orleans Memphis, Atlanta Richmond, Charleston, Nashville, Savannah, Norfolk Augusta, Montgomery and Mobile. During ten years, from 1890 to 1900 the six cities increased in their negro population over 100,000 while the eleven more southerly cities show an increase of less than 65,000. The six northern cities have 255,000 negroes over ten years of age who can read and write, while the eleven cities have only 190,000.

But the illiteracy in the most backward cities is small compared with that of the rural portions of the south in those states where the negroes are most numerous. While the illiteracy in northern cities is much less than the south, the illiteracy in the cities generally is less than in the rural districts. The figures of the census are only for large cities. If they were given for smaller cities and for all towns of over 1,000 inhabitants the same lessons would be emphasized probably with greater force. We should certainly see in a stronger light the deplorable ignorance prevailing in the regions remote from the centers. In the four states, Georgia, South Carolina, Alabama and Louisiana more than half of the negroes of the whole state are illiterate. If we could separate the centers from the rest it would be found in many regions that the intelligence is hardly greater than fifty years ago.—Workman.

THE HARVEST HOME.

The cold, disagreeable weather that followed the rain of last Friday did not keep a good sized crowd from attending the Harvest Home last Saturday, and between 800 and 1000 passed through the gates.

Outside of the colt show the exhibition of stock was very limited, but the show of garden and field products was never better in this county, while the display of poultry was immense. The judges who passed upon the corn and potatoes had a hard task to perform, so large and fine was each of these exhibits.

The hitching contest excited the greatest interest of anything on the program, but the crowd could not understand how the award was made as it was. Vox populi placed the premium on Gaines or Hafer, but it must be remembered that those on the outside of the ring very often take issue with the judges in regard to their awards.

The good cooks and the fancy needle workers were fairly well represented in the exhibition, and made competition interesting as usual.

The young people who delight in the perforance known as tripping the light fantastic had a great day on the commodious pavilion, which was given up entirely to them. Taking altogether the Harvest Home scored another success, and below is a list of the successful exhibitors:

GRAIN.

Peck wheat, premium, Jerry Tanner.
Peck rye, Jerry Tanner.
Peck oats, Peter Hager.
White corn, 12 ears, Geo Hafer.
Yellow corn, 12 ears, Tom Hafer.

REV. H. MAX LENTZ DROWNED.

[Shepherdstown, West Va., Register, Thursday, September 11.]

One of the most distressing occurrences that has happened in Shepherdstown in many years was the drowning Tuesday afternoon of Rev. H. Max Lentz, pastor of the Lutheran churches of Shepherdstown and Uvilla. Mr. Lentz had gone to the Potomac river with his elder daughter, Ruth, and his son, Hualpha, his niece, Miss Bessie Fair, and Louise Anna Snyder, the daughter of the editor of the REGISTER. Mrs. Lentz also accompanied the party, but remained at the toll-house on this side of the river, with the family of Mr. Keesecker, while the others in the party crossed to the Maryland side of the river. Mr. Lentz and the young folks went to the sandbar about midway between the two bridges, and were soon in the river. They had been in the water for some time, when Mr. Lentz proposed to give Louise Anna some lessons in swimming. She placed her hands on his shoulders, and they were swimming in water about five or six feet deep, when Mr. Lentz without an exclamation or a struggle, suddenly sank. Louise Anna also went under, but quickly reappeared. The others of the party, who were on shore, some twenty feet distant from them, saw there was trouble, and Ky Young, a boy about fifteen years of age, plunged in the water to help. He succeeded in getting hold of Louise Anna and held her up until Miss Fair reached them with a boat into which she dragged the exhausted child.

Mr. Lentz never came to the surface after he first went down. It is believed that his heart must have become suddenly affected and caused his instant death, as there was no sign that he had been attacked with cramps. It was about half-past four o'clock when the accident occurred. An alarm was at once given, and the people hurried to the river, where efforts were immediately set on foot to recover the body. Men with boats were quickly on the spot, and about five o'clock the remains were recovered by James Wintermoyer, Roland Myers and Leonard and Herbert Rogers. The body was found where it had gone down, as there was little or no current at that place. It was brought to the Virginia shore, and from there taken to Mr. Hoffman's undertaking rooms, where it was prepared for burial. About ten o'clock it was taken to the Lutheran parsonage. Efforts were made when the body was first taken from the water to resuscitate it, but the spark of life had fled, never to return.

The terrible accident cast a gloom over the community. The people could scarcely believe that the strong, vigorous man who had been on the streets in full health and enjoyment of life only a couple of hours previous was now cold in death. The sad occurrence was not only a great shock and cause of great distress to his parishioners, but the people generally felt the blow. The news quickly spread, and many members of his church from the country around at once drove to town to offer condolence, hoping against hope that the sad story was not true.

One of the painful features of the affair was the great distress of Mr. Lentz's family. Three of his children were with him at the time, and powerless to help him, saw him sink to death beneath the water. His wife also was a witness of the tragedy from the opposite side of the river. The bereaved ones were quickly attended by sympathizing friends and taken to their home, where all that loving thoughtfulness could suggest was done for them. They bore up under the affliction as well as their grief-stricken hearts would permit.

Hualpha Maximus Lentz was born April 20, 1851, near Statesville, North Carolina. He was prepared for college at Catawba High School. He entered Pennsylvania College at Gettysburg and graduated in the class of 1878. He took the theolgical course in the seminary connected with that institution and was ordained as a minister of the Lutheran Church in 1881. His first charge was at Mt. Morris, Ill. He afterward served congregations at Topeka, Kansas, and Fairfield, Iowa. From Fairfield he went to Florence, Kentucky, and while serving this charge was at the same time editor of the Lutheran World, then published at Cincinnati. He conducted that paper from 1898 to 1900. In October, 1900, he accepted a call from the Lutheran churches of Shepherdstown and Uvilla, and began his ministry the first of November following.

Mr. Lentz became pastor of the Lutheran church here and at Uvilla a little less than two years ago, having entered upon his ministerial duties the first of November, 1900, succeeding Rev. C. H. Rockey. He was a preacher of ability and a pastor who looked carefully after the flock committed to his charge. He had a bright, alert mind, quick to grasp a point and ready to express his thoughts, and having been a widely read man he was familiar with a great variety of subjects and entertaining and instructive both in the pulpit and in private life. He took interest not only in his church work, but as a citizen of the town and State was ever ready to throw his influence to the cause he espoused. He was absolutely fearless in expressing his views, and no effort was too great nor was any trouble too excessive when he had an end to accomplish. He will be missed as greatly by the community at large as by the members of his own church. He had the respect of all the people for his many manly qualities and his consistent Christian life. He is survived by his wife and one son by her, and by two daughters and one son by his first wife. His aged father, who lives at Stony Point, N. C., also survives him. The hearts of our people go out in loving sympathy to the bereaved ones.

The funeral services will be held in the Lutheran church Friday morning at half-past 10 o'clock; interment in Elmwood cemetery. Rev. Dr. E. K. Bell, of Baltimore, will be in charge of the service, and clergymen from other places will also attend and take part.

Odd coats, odd vests and odd pants at the Half Price Clothing Co., Rising Sun.

The announcement of the death of Rev. H. Max Lentz was a great shock to his numerous friends here where he resided and preached for several years. A full account of the unfortunate affair appears in another column. The bereaved family have the sympathy of all their acquaintances in this county, but time only can heal their sorrow.

The fiscal court was in session, last Thursday. It was a special session to determine what steps to take to preserve the court-house, which is going to rack at a 2:40 gait on account of defective workmanship above the foundation. It was decided to employ an architect to examine the structure and inform the court what will have to be done. Among other things it is very certain that a new ceiling will have to be put in, which it is believed will improve the acoustic properties of the circuit court room. The court had the outside brick walls tested by Henry Quick, of Hebron, and A. R. Hance, of Walton, and they reported them out of plumb.

Probably the best Colored Teachers' Institute ever held in this county, closed here last Friday. About a dozen teachers were in attendance and they took an active part in the Institute, the conductor of which was Prof. Hughes, a Gallatin county product, and a very bright colored man who knows how to conduct himself so as to acquire general respect. Last Thursday night quite a number of the white citizens of the town attended the entertainment given in the colored Baptist church, by the teachers, and were well pleased with the program as rendered. The singing was very fine and the essays and debate were decidedly entertaining.

The Burlington ball tossers stole off to Erlanger, last Sunday, and crossed bats with the club at that place. To say that the Erlanger team mopped up the earth with the Burlington crowd is putting it very mildly. The heavy batters in the Erlanger team had a picnic and piled up runs until they were tired of circling the bases. Brady was alright but he was utterly without support. Erlanger gave the boys from Boone the trouncing they have been endeavoring to administer, and are elated over the complete lambasting served up to them last Sunday. The work of the pitchers was the feature of the game, Brady striking out 13 and Powers, 16. If the Burlington team ever won a game of ball on Sunday the fact has escaped this writer. Score, Erlanger, 12; Burlington, 7.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucus surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

FRUIT BEARING.

A Condition Which Is Essential to Discipleship.

Sermon by the "Highway and Byway" Preacher—Important Lessons from the Figure of the Branch and the Vine.

Chicago, Sept. 14, 1902.

Text.—"Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be My disciples."—John 15:8.

The Figure of the Vine.—No object was more familiar to the eyes of our Saviour or His disciples than were the great spreading grape vines with their immense clusters of luscious fruit hanging in purple glory amidst the sheltering green of the vines' foliage. The landscape of Palestine was fringed with the fruitful plants. Probably, many times after the work of the day was over in the little carpenter shop at Nazareth, Jesus sat under the cool retreat of the grape arbor and, with the Old Testament books in His hand, had become familiar with the metaphor of the prophets. To dwell under the vine and fig tree was emblematic of domestic happiness and peace; the rebellious people of Israel were compared to "wild grapes," "an empty vine," "the degenerate plant of a strange vine," and in Isaiah's parable of the vineyard He saw a picture of Israel and of God's patient dealing with them. With what interest He must have searched out each separate reference as the light broke in upon His soul of the true meaning of every symbol and parable. Is it any wonder that during His ministry He should make frequent use of the symbol of the vineyard and the vine to illustrate His teachings? The most beautiful and most profound of all His utterances is the last final word with His disciples before His crucifixion.

The passover supper had been eaten and the new supper instituted which was to commemorate His sacrifice for them. The quiet sadness and solemn impressiveness of the evening gathering in the upper room linger with them as they go out into the coolness of the night and pass on their way to the garden of Gethsemane, for it is possible that the last portion of Jesus' talk with His disciples was spoken while on their way to the garden, if they were not actually within its borders, with the suggestive grape vines on every hand, outlining their lesty foliage against the darker background of the night. There was the strong trunk of the vine, sending its spreading roots far down into the rocky crevices of the soil to draw nourishment and life for the branches reaching out from the parent stem in every direction. There were the green verdure of the leaf and the clustering grapes beneath, ripening and swelling under the dews of the evening and the warming rays of the sun during the day.

"You see that splendid vine over yonder. We have passed it and admired it many many times during the years we have been together. Do you remember that hot day after the weary travel when we rested here and refreshed ourselves with the luscious fruit? Well, what that great, strong vine is to the branches and the fruit, I am to you in the spiritual life. You remember as we sat under the shade of that olive tree there, we watched the faithful husbandman going over the vine and caring for it. Here the pruning knife was used, there the destroying growth which had attacked the branch was removed and the branch purged; a little farther along a dead branch was still clinging to the vine It had failed to put forth leaf and fruit with the return of the season because its channels were choked and the life-giving nourishment of the vine could not flow through it. This dead branch the husbandman quickly severed from the vine and cast it from him. All the thought and hope of the husbandman rested in that splendid vine. Fruit was what he was after, and anything which interfered with its growth was cut and pruned and purged away. My Father is the Husbandman of the True Vine. Every branch in Me that beareth not fruit He taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit, He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. I am the Vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in Me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without Me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned.

"Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples."

Fruit Bearing.—Our text brings before us an exhaustless theme. The marvelous conceptions which it suggests would supply material for many sermons instead of one. The theme to which we are going to specially direct your attention is that of Fruit Bearing. At this time of the year how Nature seeks to force this lesson upon us. The waving fields of tasseling corn gladden the farmer's eye, and as he makes ready the corn crib for the ripening harvest he rejoices in the Fruit Bearing of his broad acres. What if Nature's voice is not heard, and his soul is dead to the call of God to bear fruit even as his fields yield him the increase?

A stroll through the orchard is a wonderful and inspiring sight. The bending branches, groan under their weight of fruit, and each red-cheeked [illegible] is visible from the [illegible] tree and the [illegible] the sun [illegible] the har[illegible] the [illegible] My Father is the Husbandman." He has placed you in this world for a purpose, the bearing of fruit. He has a right to expect fruit. And as the husbandman cuts out and casts away the unfruitful branches, so will God do with you, O soul! if you fail to bear fruit to His honor and glory. No matter how beautiful a leaf and foliage you are growing in your life, if the fruit is lacking you have missed the supreme purpose of God in you, and are cast out to be burned as a useless and dry branch. With what impatience would you go year after year to the fruit tree in your orchard that failed to bear the fruit which you have a right to expect, and for which the tree was given room in your garden! At last the exclamation would burst from your lips: "Cut it down, for why cumbereth it the ground?" And can you, O soul! knowing that this is so, be indifferent to your barrenless life? Can you rightfully demand more of your fruit tree than God has a right to demand of you? Can your belly be satisfied with the good things which Natnre gives in eloquent testimony of the necessity of Fruit Bearing, and your soul not recognize its obligation to God to bear fruit in its turn?

Conditions of Fruit Bearing.—You are to bear fruit, but not the fruit which is grown apart from the Vine in the life of the unregenerate man "As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in Me." Here is the secret of Fruit Bearing: the kind of Fruit Bearing which is able to satisfy God. Apart from the True Vine you may be able to grow fruits of character and life which will deceive the world, but you cannot deceive God, and the false fruit will be cast out with the severed branch which gave it birth and both will be burned. If you would bear fruit you must abide in the Vine.

But how to become part of the Vine is of first importance. No one by Nature is part of the True Vine, but we may be grafted thereln. This process is realized at conversion. Faith in Jesus Christ as the only begotten Son of God and the Saviour of the world brings us into the vital relationship to the True Vine which enables us to bear fruit to the satisfying, of, as our text puts it, to the glorifying, of God. The figure of the vine and the branch shows how close and vital is the relationship which is sustained between Christ and those who have been cleansed in His precious blood and have been born new creatures in Him In fact, as Mr. Moody used to say: "God has made no provision in the Bible for isolation. Scripture expressions all show a contrary state of things: We are 'branches' in the vine 'members' in the body, 'stones' in the temple, 'brothers and sisters' in the family, bearing a close relation to each other. We have first to look up and realize our relation to God; and then to learn the various relationships we have to our neighbors. All are in their different niches, filling the place God has given them; and we must desire not only to serve God, but by love to serve one another."

The condition of vital importance to Fruit Bearing is abiding in the Vine The bearing of fruit follows as a most inevitable result. If the life of Christ the Vine, is flowing through us, the branches, it will be as natural for us to bear fruit as for the rain to fall from the overshadowing cloud upon the earth. As the sap responds to the wooing of springtime, and comes coursing through the channels and ducts of the parent trunk and sends the throb of awakening life to the outermost branches, so the life of Christ, the True Vine, flows to the branches which abide in Him, and they feel the electric thrill of that life which is unending. The sap in the natural vine serves a three-fold purpose, even as does the life of Jesus Christ as it flows through the believer: First, it keeps the branch in a healthy condition; second, it helps it to grow, and third, it compels Fruit Bearing.

A healthy branch must be fed by the life of the vine. If anything occurs to disturb the normal condition of the vine, and restrict the flow of sap to the branch, an enfeebled condition ensues, growth is stopped, and Fruit Bearing made impossible. Make a ligature around the branch of a vine, cutting off a part of the life-giving, growth-feeding sap, and see how long your branch will remain healthy. The fresh green of the foliage will disappear, the bark will dry and shrivel, and it will take but a glance to see that the branch is in an unhealthy and dying condition. Is there something pressing upon your life which is cutting off from you the flow of the vital life of Christ? Are the "cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches," the desire tor selfish pleasure, the yielding to the fleshly appetites and lusts, the cherishing of some hidden sin, choking the channel of your life, and preventing the Christ life reaching you? Each succeeding day which passes while such a condition exists brings more deadness to the branch, and makes it harder to recover a healthy state again. The branch to be healthy must have unrestricted flow of sap from the vine; and you, dear Christian friend, must have no strictures in your life which would cut off the life-giving presence of Jesus Christ if you desire to remain in a healthy spiritual condition.

But mere healthy condition of the branch is not the ultimate aim of the vine in sending to it the life-giving sap. Every pulsation of the flowing sap sings a song of growth, which enlarges the branch's possibilities for Fruit Bearing. How beautiful it is year by year to note the enlarging [illegible] reaching branch of the [illegible] the silent message of [illegible] The husband[illegible] it is [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE NEWER IRRIGATION.

Experience in California Has Led to the Introduction of Better Methods of Watering.

It appears that recently the small furrow method of irrigating is undergoing certain modifications. The occasion for the change is that in certain of the heavier soils particularly the use of water in many shallow furrows followed by cultivation results in the formation of a compact layer and this prevents the percolation of water into the subsoil. This discovery led many southern California fruit growers to resort to fewer and deeper furrows and to new devices to enable the tree to get the benefit of the water.

There has been a wide use of the subsoil plow, with a wedge-shaped foot attached to a slim standard rising to the ordinary beam. The standard opposes its thin edge to the soil so as to cleave it with the least difficulty, and the foot passing through or beneath the hardpan lifts and breaks it. The result of the subsoiling is to open a way for the water to sink and spread below the hardpan. It is usual to run the plow once through the center of the interspace between the rows of trees, sometimes at right angles to the irrigation furrows. When this is done, the water is admitted to the furrows as usual but instead of flowing along smoothly it drops into the track of the subsoiler and runs there a long time before rising again to continue its course down the furrow. It is the experience of some growers that the water has taken five or six days to reach the lower end of the furrows, a distance which would have been covered in 24 hours if the subsoiler has not intervened. This has been shown to result in much water for the subsoil and a notable irrigation of trees which had been famishing, although shallow furrow irrigation had proceeded regularly. The usual practice is now to have six deep furrows in 20-foot spaces. The number varies according to the character of the soil, but is, in any case, less than in the small, shallow furrow system which formerly prevailed.

The recourse to deeper furrows and to the subsoil plowing has been made in several citrus fruit districts in southern California. Its success depends upon conditions. There are cases in which too deep use of the subsoiler has admitted the water at a point too low for the best results to the tree, which grows on a leachy subsoil, and the cutting of roots by the subsoiler has in some cases brought shallow rooting trees into temporary distress.

The general conclusion, however, is that deepr introduction of water favors deeper rooting, and is very economical of water by preventing the loss by evaporation from the surface, which, theoretically, is dry, but which, actually, with shallow furrows over an irrigation hardpan, becomes too often saturated over nearly the whole space between the trees.

The use of cement in the construction of flumes has largely increased in the practice of fruit growers in the older irrigated regions of the Pacific coast, because by means of locally devised machinery the cement flume has been cheapened so that its first cost is less than that of the lumber flume when suitably durable timber is high.

Similar machinery is used for the construction of continuous cement pipe, which is replacing open laterals in carrying water from main ditches to the land of individual irrigators. Not only is such flume sometimes cheaper than board flumes, but the annoyance of leakage and the cost of extensive repairs are done away with. —E. J. Wickson, in Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

FIGHT DUST WITH TAR.

Frenchman Are Now Experimenting Along Suggestions Coming All the Way from California.

Perhaps it is thought that petroleum serves but to burn in lamps and furnaces and run our automobiles. That is the use, perhaps, that we make of it, but in America, California for example, petroleum is employed to water even public roads. Persons who have seen the operation declare it to be marvelous. There is neither dust nor odor, because the petroleum amalgamates in a way with the dust and clothes the soil with a sort of coating solid and durable as asphalt.

The towns which have adopted this system economize, it is calculated, 45 per cent. of the expenses occasioned by the old plan of daily sprinkling with water. As a ton of petroleum costs only 20 francs in California and 250 francs in France, it is not practicable to adopt the American plan. There is nothing, however, to forbid us using mineral tar, of which the price varies from 15 to 50 francs the ton. That is what Dr. Guglielminetti recommends, who has employed it at Monte Carlo with the same results as petroleum. Wetted with the tar the road becomes compact and hard and rain water runs upon it without penetrating.

Now it is in the dust that nestle the microbes, since 2,000,000 is the mean number found in one gramme of dust, so the new system of watering is considered eminently hygienic. The expense of sprinkling a route five meters wide would be about 300 francs per kilometer. Since 1880 a tarred route has existed in the Gironde before the gas works. The Touring club of France will make an experiment at Champigny, outside Paris, with tar and tar oil.—Paris Letter in Chicago Post.

DRIVEWAY ENTRANCES.

Favorable Impressions Are Largely Due to the Surroundings of a Handsome Home.

So much hangs on the effective arrangement of driveway entrances at the portals of the home grounds, through which critical visitors must mostly pass and receive their first impression of the place and indirectly of the occupants—great care should be bestowed upon them, having an eye to the road itself, its manner of approach through the grounds, toward the dwelling, and to the planting general landscape effect.

The accompanying photograph shows a side approach that seems perfect in all its details. The roadway has a gentle, sweeping ascent by well-kept sod borders. The shrubs massed on either side are atractive throughout the year, and especially so at the time our picture was taken, when the hydrangeas were at their showiest, set off by the edging of Japanese barberry.—Meehan's Monthly.

MODERN ROAD MAKING.

Instructive Information Collected by the Inquiry Office of the Agricultural Department.

Some astonishing facts have been developed by the office of road inquiry of the department of agriculture. Who would have supposed, for instance, that bad roads are so costly in comparison with good ones as to increase the expense of moving farm products and supplies threefold? Yet such is the truth, and it is estimated that the money thus thrown away more than equals, in the aggregate, the entire expenses of the United States government! On the average American road it costs 25 cents per ton to move produce one mile; on good roads the cost is only eight cents.

The road office finds the macadam road superior to all others. Powerful machinery for road-building has recently been devised, such as an elevating grader, capable of lifting earth from cuts and dropping it into wagons with great rapidity.

A very interesting style of road now used in several western and middle states possesses a double steel track, laid in a concrete bed, each rail being eight inches wide, with a flange on the inner side, the space between the rail being such as to suit all standard gauge vehicles. On these roads loads are drawn with surprising ease and swiftness. One instance is recorded in which a single horse drew a load of 11 tons, which could only be moved on an ordinary road by 20 horses. The steel-track roads vary in cost from $1,500 to $3,500 per mile.—Cosmopolitan Magazine.

The Secret of Good Roads.

A hard surface, well rounded, so that the water will run off quickly, is the secret of a good road. Attention after a road is once permanently built is imperative, so that the washed-out places and depressions where water stands may be repaired. A little timely work will keep a road in good shape

DOMESTIC ODDS AND ENDS.

Outlines from the Household Authorities Served for the Busy Housewife's Benefit.

Bath bags are cheap, if they are homemade. A yard of fine cut cheese cloth will make half a dozen or more. They should be filled with bran, powdered orris root, and a few shavings of castile soap.

If you want a sour cream mayonnaise beat until light two eggs, one cup sour cream, two teaspoons sugar, teaspoon mustard, and one of salt. Add three tablespoons vinegar. Stir on stove in a double boiler until thickened.

To hide the white marble mantelpiece, if it is desired to, a good scheme is to have a wooden cover built to fit right over the mantel, with book shelves down each side of a fireplace, and a shelf to cover the marble mantel shelf.

This makes nice bottled sauce: Remove seeds from six green peppers, peel four large onions, and chop both fine; put into a saucepan with two dozen peeled tomatoes, eight tablespoonfuls of moist sugar, three tablespoonfuls of salt, and one and one-half pints of vinegar. Set on the fire and simmer for an hour. Then let the mixture cool before putting into wide-mouthed bottles or jars.

For spiced berry syrup cook well ripened berries in an agate or porcelain kettle on the back of the stove in as little water as will prevent scorching; when simmered stir with a wooden spoon and strain through flannel. To each pint of juice put one pound of granulated sugar, one-half ounce each of cinnamon and nutmeg, one-fourth ounce each of cloves and mace. Tie spices in a thin cloth, set the stewpan or kettle in a larger pan to prevent burning the syrup, and when it comes to a boil remove spice bag and seal at once.

A palatable addition to the menu of a convalescent is an "invalid's cutlet." For this take three cutlets from a neck of mutton, trim one neatly and fix it between the other two, which should be large enough to lap it all around. Fasten the three together with a string or small toothpick skewers, and broil, turning constantly while they are cooking. When cooked take the middle cutlet out and serve with a little potato snow or some spinach, or whatever the doctor will permit. It will be found that this middle cutlet has absorbed all the juice of the other two and is both delicate and extremely nourishing.

A DOUBTFUL WELCOME.

Having Eladed the Watch-Out the Stranger Was Invited to Stay a While.

"They told me that I would find lodgings for the night with Uncle Jim Harper, whose cabin was almost on the crest of the Cumberland mountains, and I arrived there just before sundown, after a long up-hill tramp over a lonely road," said our southern tramp, relates the Detroit Free Press. "Uncle Jim was sitting on the doorstep, and after I had saluted him and asked for lodging he queried:

"'Stranger, did any one stop ye on the trail and ax yo'r business in this neighborhood?'

"'No, no one,' I replied.

"'Did any one shoot at ye?'

"'No.'

"'Nobody roll rocks down on the trail ahead of ye?'

"'No.'

"'That's mighty, qunre,' he mused, and, rising to his feet, he reached for a tin horn hanging on the door and blew a loud blast. In about five minutes a young man of 20, who was plainly his son, came hurrying out of the woods, and the father asked:

"'Bill, what yo' been doin' with yo'rself this afternoon?'

"'I dun fell asleep,' sheepishly replied Bill.

"'And yo' didn't see this yere stranger comin' along?'

"'No.'

"'I'll hev to see 'bout yo' gwine to sleep when yo' was set to watch,' said the father in tones that made Bill wince, and then turning to me as he extended his hand, he added:

"'Well, stranger, hein' you got past my son Bill without bein' crushed or shot, I sorter take it that it's my dooty to ax ye to come into supper and tarry all night. If yo' turn out to be one o' them revenoo fellers we kin put a bullet through yo' in the mawnin' jest as well.'"

How to Give Away an Orange.

When giving away an orauge it was formerly considered that all that was needed was to say: "I give you this orange." The real modern up-to-date way is as follows: I give you all, and singular, my estate and interest, right, title, claim and advantage of, and in, this orange, together with all the skin, rind, juice, pulp, and pips; with full power to bite, cut, suck or otherwise eat the same or give the same away; together with all the rind, skin, juice pulp and pips anything heretofore or hereinafter or in any other deed or deeds, instruments of whatsoever nature to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding.—Woman's Home Companion.

Fried Stuffed Eggs.

Prepare the eggs as for stuffed eggs, filling the cavity of the whites evenly, and pressing the two halves together so as to make it appear as a whole egg. Take what is left of the mixture, add to it one raw egg beaten light, roll each egg in this, covering thoroughly, every part of it, and fry in boiling fat. Serve around a dish of green peas, or with a cream sauce into which has been stirred, just before removing from the fire, two slightly heaping tablespoonfuls of grated Parmesan cheese.—Boston Budget.

HOWELL'S HUMOR.

Funny Story Related by Him Is Reproval of an Overardent Admirer.

William Dean Howells has no considerable reputation as a teller of humorous stories, but once in a while an excellent yarn is attributed to him. It was provoked by the action of a young author who had been a protege of Howell's and who when he "arrived" never lost an opportunity to say something nice of Howells. On one occasion the younger author made an address before a body of literary men in which he virtually asserted, that, everything good and great in native literature owed its inspiration to Howells. The address was printed far and wide and commented on at length, not always in a manner complimentary to its author. Mr. Howells' attention was naturally called to the matter and he wrote his protege a letter in which he involved a story of two men who, bathing at the seashore, were seen struggling and heard crying for help. A crowd gathered to watch the efforts of the life guards, who could hear above the roar of the ocean and the noise made by the crowd a voice bellowing: "Save the red-haired man! Save him first! The red-haired man, sure!" Both men were saved and the guards, going after the excitable fellow on the beach in the hope of a gratuity, asked: "Red-head chap relation o' yours, sir?" "No—no relative at all," he replied, "but he owes me $10."

Half-Inflated Balloon Was Taken by a Negro Soldier for General Shafter.

Some army officers who were in Cuba with Gen. Shafter's army of invasion told the other day an anecdote at the expense of the commander of that expedition. The troops with all their paraphernalia of war had landed and were awaiting the order to advance on Santiago. Staff officers were busy carrying out the details for the advance and everywhere there was hurry and bustle. Shafter was lying in a hammock in front of his headquarters at Siboney, while 100 yards down the road the men of the signal corps were inflating the war balloon preparatory to making the first ascension. Without warning the ropes which held it captive parted and the balloon, half-inflated and looking for all the world like the body and legs of a gigantic fat man, started down the road toward Santiago. There was just enough gas in it to keep it upright without entirely clearing the ground and it went bobbing along, up and down, as though it were walking. A negro soldier passing along at that moment saw the balloon and shouted at the top of his voice: "Hi, dar! Guess dat mus' be de ole man goin' fur de front!"

Not to return a benefit is the greater sin, but not to confer it is the earlier.—Seneca.

RECORD OF THE PAST.

The best guarantee of the future is the record of the past, and over fifty thousand people have publicly testified that Doan's Kidney Pills have cured them of numerous kidney ills, from common backache to dangerous diabetes, and all the attendant annoyances and sufferings from urinary disorders. They have been cured to stay cured. Here is one case:

Samuel J. Taylor, retired carpenter, residing at 312 South Third St., Goshen, Ind., says: "On the 25th day of August, 1897, I made an affidavit before Jacob C. Mann, notary public, stating my experience with Doan's Kidney Pills. I had suffered for thirty years and was compelled at times to walk by the aid of crutches, frequently passed gravel and suffered excruciatingly. I took every medicine on the market that I heard about, and some gave me temporary relief. I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills, and the results I gave to the public in the statement above referred to. At this time, on the 19th day of July, 1902, I make this further statement, that during the five years which have elapsed I have had no occasion to use either Doan's Kidney Pills or any other medicine for my kidneys. The cure effected was a permanent one."

A FREE TRIAL of this great Kidney medicine which cured Mr. Taylor will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists, price 50 cents per box.

The Best Remedy Known for Man or Beast.

FOR IRRITATIONS OF THE SKIN, RASHES, Heat Perspiration, Lameness, and Soreness incidental to Canoeing, Riding, Cycling, Tennis, or any Athletics, no other application so soothing, cooling, and refreshing as a bath with CUTICURA SOAP, followed by gentle anointings with CUTICURA, the Great Skin Cure.

Millions of Women use CUTICURA SOAP for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations of women, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves, as well as for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. CUTICURA SOAP combines delicate emollient properties derived from CUTICURA, the great skin cures, with the purest of cleansing ingredients and the most refreshing of flower odours. Nothing can induce those who have once used these great skin purifiers and beautifiers to use any others.

J. W. DUNCAN, M. C. B. C. C.

The sowing of seed by hand is not an economical method, as more seed is required than when a drill is used, and there is a larger return from the drill, owing to better covering of the seed and greater uniformity of depth. The drill has been improved to a high degree of efficiency, and some have fertilizer attachments. In all experiments made to determine the comparative value of the drill and hand seeding a less quantity of seed, carefully drilled in, yielded more bushels per acre, in proportion to seed used than seeding by hand.

Thirty-five or forty years ago a Missouri wood carver, poor in this world's goods, turned out the bowl of a pipe from a corncob and showed it to his family. Later he concluded to manufacture the pipes. He died a very wealthy man. One of his factories turns out seventeen millions of cob pipes every year. The farmers who in the vicinity of the pipe factories, so it is stated, sell their cobs for more than they get from the corn itself. Several farmers in the vicinity gain an income of as much as $4,000 a year from the sale of cobs alone.

Secretary Wilson, who is weak on geography and hair-trigger of speech has secured an appropriation of $10,000 from congress for the purpose of making experiments in the raising of silkworms and the production of raw silk. Kansas experience with the silkworm proved several things. Among others that the silkworm would pass a mulberry tree by to eat himself cross-eyed on Osage orange leaves; that he was as delicate as a Poland China hog in Cholera times, and that he demanded as much attention as a teething baby in summer.

Our townspeople had quite a surprise, last week, in the announcement of the marriage of E. Wallace Grant, son of Dr. J. M. Grant, of this place, to Miss Sybil Seering, of Madison, Ind. His many friends extend good wishes to him in his matrimonial venture. He and his bonnie bride are expected to visit Dr. Grant as soon as leave of absence is granted him.

The Juvenile Missionary Society of the M. E. Church gave an open session evening of the 14th. A good audience greeted them and a very interesting program was rendered. Miss Katharine Cook presided over the meeting with the dignity and grace of one ten years her senior, and all of its officers did fine. The minute show they are doing their work nobly and faithfully. The program consisted of select readings, recitations, solos and chorus, all of which were well rendered. Clifford McWethy threw the audience into a rear of laughter when he told how he earned his missionary money. According to Methodistic rules, a collection was taken and the children were delighted that the older people appreciated their efforts to such an extent as their contribution showed.

I went down with W. T. Ryle and spent Friday evening with the Beef Club, and found everything moving along smoothly. The colored boys entertained the club with a game of ball and James Setters gave an exhibition of his skill in throwing the lasso.

I am glad to know that the ladies classed as old maids in my report of the club meeting did not take offense at what was said, because I would not intentionally, wound the feelings of any one. About 22 or 23 is the distinguishing line here between young girls and old maids, but varies in different localities. In justice to, and in behalf of the young ladies referred to, I will state that they have not passed very far beyond the distinguishing line, and in point of beauty, intelligence and good qualities of mind and heart they are the equal of any of the young girls, and are worthy the respect, confidence and consideration of all the young men and old bachelors—especially Miss Stella, the youngest.

If the gentleman that requested the Editor not to publish certain names in connection with Commissary items, had requested the correspondent not to mention said parties, the result would have been the same. Since the request was made, it has been thrown in my face that I have been guilty of falsehood and misrepresentation. In defense of myself I will state that I am ready to prove every word I have said, except the smile said to have been worn by the party on a certain Monday evening may have been exagerated. If there is any way by which a heartfelt smile can be measured, and it falls to be as long as ones arm, I will apologize for this.

A new comer to our town, who expects to stay five months, gives it as his opinion that the dogs are decidedly on top in this burg. John McConnell was equally as good, but the lawmakers in the fiscal court squeezed him out when they allowed the justices of the peace $3 a day for riding over and inspecting the roads, while the overseer's allowance is not to exceed $15 a year. We had no idea that the road money would begin to stick in the hands of the fiscal court, when it ought to be used to prevent people from sticking in mudholes in the public roads of the county.

Death of R. H. Clore.

Robert Henry Clore was born on the farm adjoining the town of Belleview, now owned by James Rogers, September 12th, 1853; died at his late residence in Rabbit Hash, Sept. 5th, 1902, at 5 o'clock p. m., from injuries inflicted by a kick from a horse, striking him just below the heart; he only survived nine days after the accident, which occurred on the 28th of the month previous, aged 48 years, 11 mos. and 23 days. He was the oldest son of Micheal and Minerva Clore; his mother died the 14th of Sept., 1899. On the 15th day of October, 1884, he was united in marriage to Miss Belle Brady Huey, who was born June 16th, 1866, near Locust Grove school-house, and a daughter of John S. and Lamora Huey. To this union was born six children—five sons and one daughter, Katie V., who died 10 or 12 years ago, and John Huey, the second son, died Dec. 17, 1898—James Elbert, Willard Frank, Robert Lee and John Samuel, still survive to assist their lone and sad mother to fight life's battle. Words can hardly express the high esteem our departed friend was held in among all that knew him. He was an obedient and dutiful son, a true and loving husband, an indulgent and affectionate father and a kind and generous neighbor; he was sought after as a companion by old and young; his word was never doubted or questioned; he was ever faithful to his church, being a member of the Bellevue Baptist church for 20 or 25 years. His funeral was conducted with a brief and appropriate service at the grave in the new cemetery at Bellevue, by Rev. Atwood, on the 7th inst., in the midst of his oldest son, an aged father an only sister and brother and other relatives and a host of friends, the last tribute of respect was paid to the departed by laying the body to rest in its silent tomb, the heart felt sympathy of each one present went out to the bereaved wife and children and relatives. May the lone widow and her children receive such comfort from their Heavenly Father that may heal their broken hearts and spirits. They have the sympathy of the entire community in their great loss.

One Repentant Sinner Is Able to Set the Angelic Hosts to Singing—Sermon by the "Highway and Byway" Preacher.

Chicago, Sept. 21, 1902.

Text: I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in Heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance. —Luke, 15:7.

Eternal Realities.—Our Lord, Who spoke the words of our text, had a charming way of enforcing Divine truth by picturing in realistic and simple way the absolute certainties of the unseen realm. When He talked of Heaven or hell, of the angels or the Devil, it was with no vague "perhaps," or "it may be," or "I think so." His natural vision beheld the magnificence, the grandeur, the stability of the temple, He felt with the rest of His nation the world-controlling power of the Roman government, He came in touch with the great wisdom and learning not only of men of His own nation, but of the Greeks and Romans as well, and yet the eternal realities of the unseen world were not shut out; for He knew that "the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." His theology was not of that speculative character which busied itself with studying and evolving man-made theories, and endeavoring to reason out, by intellectual gymnastics and contortions, the secrets of God, but He was content to take God at His word. His faith laid hold of the truths of God, and He knew that because they were eternal verities there was no room for argument, or speculation, or human reasoning. Heaven was God's dwelling place, the home of the redeemed, the realm in which the angelic hosts lived, moved and had their being, and hence was a more permanent abiding place than the magnificent cities which the nations of the earth had reared. Hell was not eliminated by a system of human deductions, but its boundaries were definitely fixed, its awful torments vividly described, and in the parable of a certain" rich man and Lazarus He gives us a glimpse into the Devil's dwelling place, and what is the real agony of a lost soul. He Devil was a person, and not an influence, or a natural inbred tendency, which would make him hard to get at and hard to fight. And after Jesus had met him in that terrible battle in the wilderness and angels came and ministered unto Him, He understood how that the unseen hosts of Heaven were hovering over the earth watching for opportunities whereby they might carry out the purposes and will of God. And in our text Jesus tells us of the rejoicing in Heaven because one soul has been snatched from the power of Satan. One poor repentant sinner in the earth able to set the angelic hosts a-singing and to make the arches and dome of Heaven ring with the glad sound! Think of it! When it came time to open the Charleston exposition, the president pressed a golden key at Washington, and the ponderous machinery all through the vast buildings in the distant city was set in motion. It is wonderful to think that a slight touch can accomplish so much on so great a distance. But stop and think, and contemplate the picture which unrolls before us in the words of the text. Let your mind expand with the vastness of God's universe. There are the sun, moon and stars rolling in space and kept in place by His mighty power. Here is the earth, with its teeming millions, and God living in Nature to supply the temporal needs of these millions. Surely busy God, and no idle moments for the hosts of Heaven as they move hither and thither in fulfillment of the will of God! And yet, one single soul pushed under a load of sin is able by reaching the golden key of repentance to send a thrill through Heaven, and give back the celestial music of pardon, peace and eternal life. It is difficult, indeed, to obtain an audience with an earthly king. An ordinary mortal cannot hope to be received, except as he is lavish in his expenditure of money, and is aided by influential friends. But ah! how different it is with the repentant sinner! The first cry for help and deliverance is caught by the angelic hosts and the soul is ushered into the presence of the King to receive His pardon and His blessing. With the swiftness of lightning flash the message from earth to Heaven is sped and receives immediate attention of the King. Marvelous, is it not? And while the Recording Angel is enrolling the name in the Lamb's book of Life, the vast halls of Heaven bursts into a glad song of rejoicing, the like of which never penetrated to human ears, unmingled with the voices of the saints are those of the Old and New Testament saints, the "so great a cloud of witnesses" to the love and mercy of God. There is David with his harp; and his rejoicing in the pardon and His saving grace rings out clear and sweeter than ever it did on the hillsides of Judea as he tended his sheep. There are Peter and James and the other disciples singing with the rest. There is Philip, who longed to know the value of one poor soul as he went out into the desert to preach the word to the Ethiopian. There are the sinful woman, and the thief who hung on the cross and was the first to go into the kingdom with Christ. Yes, and there may be the tinted father or mother of the penitent soul. For years their hearts went up to the throne of grace for the wayward boy or girl, and for weary years dragged out their days their prayers ceased not, and their faith failed not. At last their long, lonely vigil is ended, and they shall be in Heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance. —Luke, 15:7.

When He talked of Heaven or hell, of the angels or the Devil, it was with no vague "perhaps," or "it may be," or "I think so." His natural vision beheld the magnificence, the grandeur, the stability of the temple, He felt with the rest of His nation the world-controlling power of the Roman government, He came in touch with the great wisdom and learning not only of men of His own nation, but of the Greeks and Romans as well, and yet the eternal realities of the unseen world were not shut out; for He knew that "the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." His theology was not of that speculative character which busied itself with studying and evolving man-made theories, and endeavoring to reason out, by intellectual gymnastics and contortions, the secrets of God, but He was content to take God at His word. His faith laid hold of the truths of God, and He knew that because they were eternal verities there was no room for argument, or speculation, or human reasoning. Heaven was God's dwelling place, the home of the redeemed, the realm in which the angelic hosts lived, moved and had their being, and hence was a more permanent abiding place than the magnificent cities which the nations of the earth had reared. Hell was not eliminated by a system of human deductions, but its boundaries were definitely fixed, its awful torments vividly described, and in the parable of a "certain" rich man and Lazarus He gives us a glimpse into the Devil's dwelling place, and what is the real agony of a lost soul. He Devil was a person, and not an influence, or a natural inbred tendency, which would make him hard to get at and hard to fight. And after Jesus had met him in that terrible battle in the wilderness and angels came and ministered unto Him, He understood how that the unseen hosts of Heaven were hovering over the earth watching for opportunities whereby they might carry out the purposes and will of God. And in our text Jesus tells us of the rejoicing in Heaven because one soul has been snatched from the power of Satan. One poor repentant sinner in the earth able to set the angelic hosts a-singing and to make the arches and dome of Heaven ring with the glad sound! Think of it! When it came time to open the Charleston exposition, the president pressed a golden key at Washington, and the ponderous machinery all through the vast buildings in the distant city was set in motion. It is wonderful to think that a slight touch can accomplish so much on so great a distance. But stop and think, and contemplate the picture which unrolls before us in the words of the text. Let your mind expand with the vastness of God's universe. There are the sun, moon and stars rolling in space and kept in place by His mighty power. Here is the earth, with its teeming millions, and God living in Nature to supply the temporal needs of these millions. Surely busy God, and no idle moments for the hosts of Heaven as they move hither and thither in fulfillment of the will of God! And yet, one single soul pushed under a load of sin is able by reaching the golden key of repentance to send a thrill through Heaven, and give back the celestial music of pardon, peace and eternal life. It is difficult, indeed, to obtain an audience with an earthly king. An ordinary mortal cannot hope to be received, except as he is lavish in his expenditure of money, and is aided by influential friends. But ah! how different it is with the repentant sinner! The first cry for help and deliverance is caught by the angelic hosts and the soul is ushered into the presence of the King to receive His pardon and His blessing. With the swiftness of lightning flash the message from earth to Heaven is sped and receives immediate attention of the King. Marvelous, is it not? And while the Recording Angel is enrolling the name in the Lamb's book of Life, the vast halls of Heaven bursts into a glad song of rejoicing, the like of which never penetrated to human ears, unmingled with the voices of the saints are those of the Old and New Testament saints, the "so great a cloud of witnesses" to the love and mercy of God. There is David with his harp; and his rejoicing in the pardon and His saving grace rings out clear and sweeter than ever it did on the hillsides of Judea as he tended his sheep. There are Peter and James and the other disciples singing with the rest. There is Philip, who longed to know the value of one poor soul as he went out into the desert to preach the word to the Ethiopian. There are the sinful woman, and the thief who hung on the cross and was the first to go into the kingdom with Christ. Yes, and there may be the tinted father or mother of the penitent soul. For years their hearts went up to the throne of grace for the wayward boy or girl, and for weary years dragged out their days their prayers ceased not, and their faith failed not. At last their long, lonely vigil is ended, and they shall be in Heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance. —Luke, 15:7.

Eternal Realities.—Our Lord, Who spoke the words of our text, had a charming way of enforcing Divine truth by picturing in realistic and simple way the absolute certainties of the unseen realm. When He talked of Heaven or hell, of the angels or the Devil, it was with no vague "perhaps," or "it may be," or "I think so." His natural vision beheld the magnificence, the grandeur, the stability of the temple, He felt with the rest of His nation the world-controlling power of the Roman government, He came in touch with the great wisdom and learning not only of men of His own nation, but of the Greeks and Romans as well, and yet the eternal realities of the unseen world were not shut out; for He knew that "the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." At last their long, lonely vigil is ended, and they shall be in

And while Heaven is rejoicing over another soul saved, that Devil, whom so many modern-day preachers and rationalistic Christians, the twentieth century Sadducees, are trying to reason and argue out of existence, is hanging around the outskirts of the celestial city and raging in impotent madness that another sinner has escaped his snare and his destruction. He tried to stifle that cry before it could penetrate the pearly gates and reach the crystal throne. He sent his minions post haste to whisper words of doubt and discouragement in the heart of the sin-sick soul. He did his utmost to quiet the rising fears, and bolster up the confidence in a false hope. Satan never lets a soul get out of his grasp if he can help it, and on the days when Heaven is the happiest, he is having his bluest of days. As the music of Heaven over the one repentant soul which he has lost floats out to him it drives him back to earth to redouble his efforts to send souls to hell. Where the revival is being felt, and the cry of repentant sinners is heard, there you will find Satan doing his hardest work. Peter declares that "your adversary, the Devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." And I am rather inclined to think the Peter caught this glimpse of the Devil during the thickest part of one of his great revivals.

The Value of a Soul.—And if Heaven rejoices so over one single soul which repents, and the Devil works so hard to compass its destruction, there must be a value in that soul which is little realized. Heaven's standard of values is not the same as that of earth, but it is the correct standard and will continue in use throughout eternities, long after the earth has melted with fervent heat and God has established a new heavens and a new earth. The cheapest thing in the world to-day is human life. Outside of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ life and the welfare of the soul consume less thought and care than are given to the dumb brutes, which sustain a positive intrinsic value to their owners. But it is not our purpose to discuss the question of man's inhumanity to man, as real and inhuman and selfish as it may be. We may not be able to estimate the value which Heaven puts upon a human soul by contrasting the cheapness in which it is held by the world, but perhaps we may be able to understand something of it by contemplating the sacrifice which Heaven was willing to make in behalf of the lost soul.

The parables of the lost sheep and the lost coin, uttered by our Lord in connection with the words of our text, reveal to us two important facts in regard to the soul's value. In the case of the sheep, individuality of the soul is set forth; in that of the coin, its intrinsic value is emphasized, and in the parable of the prodigal son, which follows, we have beautifully illustrated the intimate relationship which exists between God and the human soul: the empty place in the household; the vacant chair at the family table; the love of the father going out after the son in the far country; the full and free forgiveness which is given before the son has asked for it, and the joy of the return.

There were an hundred sheep in the fold of our parable, but every sheep was different. No two were exactly alike. The place of the lost sheep, therefore, could not be exactly filled. The completeness of the sheepfold is marred by the absence of that one sheep. The shepherd misses it. Though the ninety and nine are safe within the fold, he needs must go out after the lost sheep. So is it with the human soul. No two are alike. And the individuality of the soul gives it an inestimable value in the sight of Heaven. No soul can fill the place intended for another. A beautiful mosaic is being worked out in Heaven. If one stone is missing, it mars the completeness of the whole. Is it any wonder, then, that all the Heavenly hosts burst into song when a new stone is set and the pattern grows toward completion? To understand the value of a soul one must realize how Heaven prizes the individuality of every soul. Let this thought take hold of your heart as you engage in your Christian service. Try and see in every soul with whom you come in touch, as the Master sees, some individuality, some characteristic, which just fits into a place that God would have filled. Don't be annoyed by the peculiarities of people, but try to find in them a greater measure of service for the Master. Don't try to be like somebody else. Be yourself, doing the will of God. Don't envy some one else, his gifts, or position in the service of the Lord, but realize and understand that in your own individuality and characteristics, God can best work out His purposes, and you will more perfectly fit into the place left for you in the Heavenly mosaic.

The Intrinsic Value of a Soul.—How can we adequately set forth what the intrinsic value of a soul is to God? The lost coin was one of a certain number. They were all alike in their value. In a sense God sets no higher value on one soul than on another. He "is no respecter of persons." He "wills that all men should be saved and come to a knowledge of the truth." His love reaches to the lowest depths, and spans the widest space. This thought may be destructive of the natural pride of the human heart, but it is God's truth, just the same. Jesus is as ready to reach out to save the miserable drunkard in the gutter as He is to give salvation to the most honored and respected man in the community. The soul of one man, be he white or black, be he college president or street laborer, be he Hottentot or the son of a cultured race, is as precious in the sight of God as the soul of any other man. And to understand this intrinsic value which attaches to every soul in the sight of God, we must be able to fathom the infinite wisdom and love which moved God to make man in His own image. To give him a nature, a soul which could only find its perfect realization in yielding its will to that of the Divine and living the God-life through Him. As far as the human vision is able to penetrate and the human mind understand, every one born into the world in a certain sense is a part of God; with an immortal soul and the possibility of an eternity with Him. Think then of what inestimable value Heaven must place upon each precious soul. Not until the brightness of eternity bursts upon our vision and we see God face to face and know Him as He is, will we be able to measure the intrinsic value of a soul. As you seek to be God's instrument in the salvation of souls, try and see in each soul with which you come in touch that something which has come from God and which the touch of Jesus Christ can quicken into life and send back again to God.

The Relation of the Soul to God.—Christ used the family tie to further illustrate and emphasize the value of a soul in the sight of Heaven. There is joy in Heaven over one sinner that repenteth, because it is the return of the prodigal to the Father's House. The son that was dead is alive again, the vacant chair is once more occupied, and the aching void in the Father's heart is filled. The sorrow felt while the loved one sojourned in the far country is turned to joy, and the reunited family begins a new and brighter chapter in its history. You remember the touching little story told in the old poem of the hard-working but poor parents who found it almost impossible to provide for their large family, and who had the offer made to them by a rich relative of taking one of the children to bring up. With the dim light in their trembling hands they go from bed to bed and scan each darlings face as it rests peacefully upon baby's face as it rests peacefully upon its pillow. With an ache in the heart and a sob in the voice they discuss together which one it shall be that they shall give up. Each name is spoken in turn, but no one can be spared from the family circle and the roof tree. Though poverty is knocking at the door, love reigns within, and the family circle remains unbroken. So it is in Heaven. No soul can be spared. As God the Father looks down upon this sin-cursed earth He does not see a single soul which He is willing should remain out of the Heavenly Home. What earthly parent who loves his children can express their value in dollars and cents. How the ties of the home bind together its members with such unbreakable links as to make the thought of separation unbearable. Is it not beautiful to think that the soul sustains such a relationship to God as to be absolutely indispensable to the completeness and joy of Heaven?

Heaven's Sacrifice.—We have been endeavoring to tell something of what the value of the soul is as estimated by Heaven. The joy in Heaven exceeds the rejoicing of the shepherd who has recovered his lost sheep, it exceeds that of the woman who has found the lost coin, it is akin to the joy and gladness in the home when the prodigal returned. The value of a soul is absolute and inestimable, because of the individuality of each soul, because of its intrinsic worth as part of God Himself, and because of the relationship which the soul sustains to God as the Father. But beyond all this we have the sacrifice which Heaven made to prove the value of a soul. The price which is paid for an article at the store in a degree at least determines the value of that article. The value of a soul is measured by the richest treasure of Heaven given to win that soul back to Heaven. "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because He laid down His life for us." That is, we can fathom the love of God if we are able to realize that He gave to the uttermost, and we can know the value of a soul as we are able to estimate the value of the wonderful gift of God to man. But who can know fully the love of God, or who can estimate the real worth of God's gift in the person of His Son? Let the mind dwell upon this thought and see how the sense of God's wonderful love and marvelous gift and the value of a soul will grow upon you until words will be inadequate to express the fullness of your emotions.

"O could I speak the matchless worth,
O could I sound the glories forth
Which in my Savior shine!
I'd soar and touch the Heavenly strings,
And vie with Gabriel while he sings
In notes almost Divine.

"I'd sing the precious blood He spilt,
My ransom from the dreadful guilt
Of sin and wrath Divine!
I'd sing His glorious righteousness,
In which all-perfect, Heavenly dress
My soul shall ever shine.

"I'd sing the characters He bears,
And all the forms of love He wears,
Exalted on His throne;
In lofties songs of sweetest praise,
I would to everlasting days
Make all His glories known."

HUNTING FOR TRUSTS.

The President and Not Many Shooting Times, But the Same Roosts High and Safe.

Since the advent of our accidental administration, what are known as the "high officials" of the government at Washington are having a strenuous time. It has somehow been found necessary for them to be absent most of the time during the summer season taking extended trips, on public business of course.

The first to abandon his post of duty was the president, by retiring to Oyster Bay and removing the executive branch of the government with him. Not that he is idling away his time by any means, but seeing that the largest game in sight was a drove of trusts, he has put in the summer hunting them. The newspaper account of the expedition into New England, where it is to be presumed the principal trusts were ensconced or the president would not be there hunting them, have so far not disclosed that the unerring fire of our chief magistrate has bagged any of the game he is after. The coal trust and the beef trust are still browsing on the granite hills of New Hampshire and large herds are reported in Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, and even up in Maine, especially around Bar Harbor and the coast resorts they are reported to be plentiful.

Let us hope that the president will have better luck when he strikes the western and southern states and that the hide of at least one trust may be nailed on the door of the white house barn before congress assembles, just to show that he is really in earnest and as an example to our law givers of what he expects of them in their hunt for the same game.

The premier of the cabinet is, like his chief, absent from Washington, but he had become so tired in his hunt with the English ambassador after Boers that he is doubtless recuperating for the reciprocity treaties hunt that are expected to be bagged after a grand round up this winter.

Secretary Shaw was unfortunate in the game that he had evidently been instructed to hunt for, although he has faithfully tramped, sailed on government boats or on express trains with free passes to find his quarry. he has so far not brought down a bird or rumpled the feathers of a trust-protected magnate. The United States treasury has had to run itself, as far as he is concerned, for he has been intent in hunting out the connection between the tariff and the beef trust, but the result of his three months' work is so unsatisfactory that he has returned from the field in a dazed condition.

The secretary of war has become so exhausted in hunting Filipinos that he is enjoying a well earned holiday, by express orders from his chief, so that he can be thoroughly recuperated for the Moro hunt in the fall. His trip to Europe is expected to give him fresh ideas how to govern colonies on the European plan.

The secretary of the navy, after months of hard work preparing for the great war game, has now returned to Haverhill, being unable, from danger of seasickness, to command the United States ship Pinafore. But Admiral Higginson and the duchess of Marlborough had possession of the quarter-deck at the last accounts and the great war game was proceeding. The booming of champagne corks was distinctly heard in that direction and it is hoped that the gallant admiral has captured a prize. In the meantime the captains and the fleet are anxiously awaiting the signal for close action. The latest orders from the president, by wireless telegraph, were, it is reported, to smash the enemy and take no prisoners.

The balance of the cabinet and other "high officials" have not been heard from for over two months. No one believes they are idling away their time, but not being experienced trust hunters, like their chief, the hope of their bagging any game is a forlorn one.

A report has for some time been in circulation at Washington that Postmaster General Payne has been treed by a trust in the wilds of Wisconsin, but even if true, which is doubtful, it is expected Senator Spooner, who is influential with trusts, will release him from his predicament.

An Iowa Tariff Chirp.

The much abused editor of the republican campaign book evidently had a straight tip when he threw cold water on tariff revision, for the leaders of that party, from president down to pothouse politicians, are ignoring the question. Occasionally a chirp is heard from western states that indicates they believe the trusts can best be downed in that way. For instance, here is the Des Moines Register declaring:

"There is not so very much difference between republicans on tariff legislation. About all it amounts to is that some want the tariff revised, but in such a way as not to disturb our industrial prosperity, others are willing to have it revised, providing it will not disturb our industrial prosperity. There is no occasion to magnify differences. It is much more important to magnify the common purpose and to go about accomplishing it in a harmonious and effective manner."

——The charge is freely made that his speeches about restraining trusts are only declamation; that he knows nothing can be done; that his constitutional amendment will take years to get, if it is ever secured at all. But in cutting away the tariff protection of trusts there is something definite that can be done immediately. The republicans of the west are demanding that it be done. Unless the president is willing to rest under the suspicion that he is talking clap-trap for political purposes he will soon take occasion to say that he agrees with those ardent supporters of his in the west.—N. Y. Post.

FREEDOM FROM TRUSTS.

As Republican President or Congress Has Up to the Present Brought It About.

For six long years the republicans have had control of all branches of the government, executive, legislative and judicial. During this period the organization and growth of the trusts has been most prolific and their extortions from the public have been enlarged and extended to most of the necessities of life. The coal combine and the beef trust are examples of the growth of combinations during this period of republican administration.

The opening of this era of republican rule was emphasized by the enactment of the Dingley law, many schedules of which were not only intended to protect the combines, but were actually prepared by attorneys of the trusts and therefore were entirely in their interests. The trust magnates, finding themselves securely intrenched and protected then began a series of great combinations that staggered the commercial world and have gradually raised prices of most necessities to the highest notch ever before known.

Naturally the voters begin to kick at these exactions and attempts were made by the democrats in congress to reduce them. The present executive in his first message to the congress recommended publicity as an antidote, but no notice was taken of this recommendation by the republicans in congress. It remained for a democratic senator to propose an amendment to the census bill on the lines of President Roosevelt's recommendation. A vote was taken and all the republicans present voted against it and all the democrats for it, but it was defeated, for the republicans were in command of the situation.

The political situation became more acute and upon the close of the first session of the Fifty-seventh congress the president determined to take the stump and try and stay the tide that was flowing in favor of controlling these vast corporations. It appears from his speeches that he has no remedy to offer other than publicity of trusts' transactions, unless an amendment to the constitution can be had, but this would only be available in a future generation and the voters are clamoring for immediate relief. To change the constitution requires two-thirds of congress to vote to propose it, and three-fourths of all the states to ratify such change. Clearly this is an impossible achievement if the present temper of congress is continued, besides the further obstacle of all but one-fourth of the states agreeing to the same. The corporations control over one-third of the senate was stated by Senator Morgan, and it is doubtful if they do not control a greater percentage of the present house of representatives. Under these circumstances can the republican party be relied on to control the trusts? It would seem to be unlikely and improbable. Granting that President Roosevelt is sincere in his trust baiting, will he be able to bring his party to the same form of mind? But unfortunately, there are strong indications that the president himself is but lukewarm in his anti-trust fight. If he were sincere, would he be silent on the principal remedy for stopping the extortions of the principal combines, by saying not a word about revising the tariff and thus cut off the protection that these combines now enjoy, and which allows them to fleece the people to the tune of from 30 to 100 per cent.?

Nor does he say a word about the coal strike or lift a finger to stop it, yet there would seem to be a way open. The law of Pennsylvania forbids railroads to operate mines or manufactories of any kind, and the federal anti-trust law provides that combines can be punished by fine and imprisonment and the judicial arm of the government could enforce it.

The miners of Pennsylvania have behaved with wonderful moderation, but no word of praise or encouragement has been vouchsafed them by the president, though he enlightens the public on much less important matters at great length and minuteness.

It is, therefore, useless to look for relief from trust exactions from a republican president or a republican congress; they are bound to their idols.

CONSUMPTION CURABLE.

New York Doctor So Declares, Furthermore That the Disease Is Preventable.

"The Warfare Against Consumption" was discussed by Dr. Herman M. Biggs, medical officer of the health department, in an address before the summer school in philanthropic work, conducted by the Charity Organization society. He said in part: "Tuberculosis is absolutely preventable, and its preventability is simply putting into effect simple rules of conduct. It is a question solely of scrupulous cleanliness in regard to expectoration and disinfection of surroundings which have once housed the disease.

"It is not only preventable but curable. It is simply a question of how early a diagnosis is made. It is the most insidious of all diseases. A specialist may declare no indications of it whatever, and in a few weeks it may be manifest to anyone. When there is any question one examination is not enough. When anyone talks to you about chronic bronchitis and continued colds, make up your mind that in a majority of cases a tuberculosis focus is back of it. Then is the time to establish this fact for then it is easily curable; later it may not be."

TO BE GIVEN FOOD FREE.

Government Chemist at Washington Anxious to Secure Men on Whom to Experiment.

Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief chemist of the department of agriculture, is on the lookout for about a dozen healthy men upon whom to test the effect of artificially colored or preserved food. The agricultural department was directed to make these tests by congress this spring.

The purpose of the investigation is to determine whether food doctored by the additional coloring matter or preservatives is injurious to the human system. Dr. Wiley proposes to feed the men for ten days upon food which has been doctored and note the effect on the digestion and general health. He will then feed them for a similar period upon normal food products and compare the results with those of the first test. He will make report to congress upon his investigations.

Inasmuch as the men may be poisoned by eating the doctored food, the department fears that difficulty will be experienced in obtaining the necessary subjects.

AN ENEMY OF AUTOS.

John D. Rockefeller Bars the Horseless Vehicles from the Country Estate.

John D. Rockefeller dislikes automobiles, and, with a view of preventing them from trespassing on his vast domain, called Boxwood, at Pocantico hills, he has erected signs on his property ordering automobile owners to keep off his land. The signs are made of galvanized iron, and are mounted on posts. They bear these words:

"Automobiles are not allowed on these grounds."

Mr. Rockefeller has 50 miles of private driveways on his estate, many of which cover serpentine trails and run along steep embankments. Several times the millionaire's horses were frightened by the machines, and this made him decide to shut out automobile owners from his lands. Watchmen are employed to enforce the rules.

Disappointment for Tourists.

It's too bad that so many people will never have a chance now to see the Campanile, but, says the Chicago Record-Herald, the canals and several other landmarks—if an Irish bull may be permitted here—are still in place, however.

PRESBYTERIAN PASTOR PRAISES PE-RU-NA.

First Presbyterian Church of Greensboro, Ga., and Its Pastor and Elder.

THE day was when men of prominence hesitated to give their testimonials to proprietary medicines for publication. This remains true today of most proprietary medicines. But Peruna has become so justly famous, its merits are known to so many people of high and low stations, that no one hesitates to see his name in print recommending Peruna.

The highest men in our nation have given Peruna a strong endorsement. Men representing all classes and stations are equally represented.

A dignified representative of the Presbyterian church in the person of Rev. E. G. Smith does not hesitate to state publicly that he has used Peruna in his family and found it cured when other remedies failed. In this statement the Rev. Smith is supported by an elder in his church.

Rev. E. G. Smith, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Greensboro, Ga., writes:

"Having used Peruna in my family for some time it gives me pleasure to testify to its true worth.

"My little boy seven years of age had been suffering for some time with catarrh of the lower bowels. Other remedies had failed, but after taking two bottles of Peruna the trouble almost entirely disappeared. For this special malady I consider it well nigh a specific.

"As a tonic for weak and worn out people it has a few or no equals."—Rev. E. G. Smith.

Mr. M. J. Rossman, a prominent merchant of Greensboro, Ga., and an elder in the Presbyterian church of that place, has used Peruna, and in a recent letter to The Peruna Medicine Co., of Columbus, Ohio, writes as follows:

"For a long time I was troubled with catarrh of the kidneys and tried many remedies, all of which gave me no relief. Peruna was recommended to me by several friends, and after using a few bottles I am pleased to say that the long looked for relief was found and I am now enjoying better health than I have for years, and can heartily recommend Peruna to all similarly afflicted. It is certainly a grand medicine."—M. J. Rossman.

Catarrh is essentially the same wherever located. Peruna cures catarrh wherever located.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

LIGHT SHIPPING CRATE.

For Sending Pigs by Freight or Express the Device Here Given Is Adapted Especially.

J. A. Macdonald sends the Breeders' Gazette the description of a very satisfactory shipping crate. In the illustration part of the front side is cut away to show the inside arrangement. A good size for a pig three months old is: Length, 40 inches; depth, 23 inches; width, 11 inches. For a pig eight weeks old a length of 32 inches, a depth of 18 inches, and a width of 9 inches will be about right. Crates for shipping by express must be made as light as is safe from breakage.

SHIPPING CRATE FOR SWINE.

It is not fair to make a purchaser of a pig two months old pay express rates on 30 or 40 pounds of crate when they can be sufficiently strong and weigh but half as much. For ends and bottoms take five-eighths inch seasoned spruce or other tough, light wood, one-half inch stuff for sides and cover, with space between slats. In front is a trough, T, for feed and water. Just above is a sloping board, P, running to the top, through which the feed in transit is given. The upper compartment is provided with a slide, S, on top, and inside is the bag, B, containing the meal and grain fare ample for the journey. In cold weather the sides may be boarded up almost tight. For pigs weighing 75 pounds a standard of one-half inch stuff nailed in the center of the sides. Shavings from a shingle mill make the best bedding.

BAD FEEDING OF HOGS.

Why a Lot of Pork Is Sold Every Year at an Actual Loss to the Owners.

In an address to Iowa farmers William Hester said: A common mistake is in trying to raise hogs and produce pork under unfavorable conditions. I believe thousands of hogs are fattened and sold every year at an actual loss to their owners. This fact, if it is a fact, is brought about in many instances by a too exclusive corn diet. A litter of pigs is farrowed; the sow is fed on corn; she sadly needs something different to enable her to rightly nourish her large family, but corn is cheap and handy and she gets corn. As the weeks go by she becomes feverish and restless, catches chickens, perhaps, if she can get at them. The pigs are half famished and early begin to eat. They eat corn. They are unthrifty; the sow is dry and is penned up in a small pen away from the pigs, to fatten on corn. The pigs are looking so badly and making so little growth their owners conclude they must have worms. Quite likely. Then they get their first change from corn, and that is copperas, and then corn again and so on ad infinitum. After a tedious while they at length reach a weight that will admit of marketing, and they are sold at a loss, having eaten their heads off.

NEW CORN FOR FEED.

Experienced Stockmen Are of the Opinion That It Is Deficient in Important Elements.

It cannot be said that corn is the cause of hog cholera, says a writer in Wallace's Farmer, for cholera is a germ disease. It is a dangerous practice, however, to feed new corn freely. The difference in the price of new and old corn makes the temptation great to feed the new.

An exclusive new corn diet is not fit for brood sows or growing pigs. It is deficient in muscle-forming elements, and should not be fed to any extent until the hog is fully matured and it is necessary to begin the fattening process. Then there is nothing to equal corn. Many times what is called cholera might be called the corn disease. A little corn in hard roasting ears furnishes a good variety, but if fed exclusively it is like throwing money away.

Pasture is plenty now, and with it feed oats, damaged wheat, screenings and other grains until your hogs are ready to fatten; then feed all the corn you like, giving oats, wheat or barley merely as a change of diet.

Export Demand for Cattle.

In war or peace, it seems, the world cannot get along without Uncle Sam, says the Indiana State Sentinel. Just at the time when the cessation of hostilities in South Africa knocks out the $25,000,000 a year exportation of horses and mules from American farms for British military purposes comes the news of the first cargo of Texas cattle being shipped for re-stocking the wasted velt, and this is only a starter, for it seems pretty certain that a large part of the $15,000,000 which England will appropriate specifically for that purpose will come here looking for live stock and farm machinery, not to mention the untold millions which England has promised to lend the Boers at three per cent. Therefore, those who looked for a slump in the price of American horses and mules and beeves at the close of the war are likely to be disappointed.

COMPLETE HORSE STALL.

It Should Be Five Feet Wide and Supplied with Labor-Saving Contrivances.

The most convenient width for horse stalls is five feet from center to center. The partitions will usually be six inches in width, which gives a net width of four feet six inches. When necessary a narrower stall may be used, perhaps without serious detriment to the horse. The main objection is insufficient space to care for him. Bedding, cleaning and harnessing are much more easily and quickly done when the stall is roomy. The floor should have an incline of two inches, and can safely be built of cement, covering with plank until one flooring of plank has worn out, when the cement will be tough and hard. The partitions should be built without a standard to support the rear end from floor to ceiling. This post often used always interferes with the horse when backing out. When not used, the horse finds an easy swing of the head over the partition, which need not be over four feet high. The partition may be strong enough without this post. See cut. If a 4x4 scantling (a a) is placed with its foot at the rear of the partition and the top end of the ceiling above, then a short post (b) and a cap scantling (c) securely toe-nailed, all that part of the partition from the rear to the point where c joins a should be filled in solidly with short pieces of waste stuff, making a solid stiff side that will withstand much hard use, and such punishment as a frisky horse has to give to his stall. It may be sided either horizontally or perpendicularly. One may examine this when finished and find it will give to the hand and not be rigid, yet stalls like this we have in use for many years which are as good as the day they were built, excepting the outside wear. Always put a slat bottom in a hay manger, unless attention is paid to frequent cleaning. Some loss may follow in scattered grain and finer bits of hay that may be saved with a tight bottom, but better have a small waste than an accumulation of dirt that the horse does not relish. The grain box should not be less than 18 inches square. Plenty of surface and a thin layer of grain will cause much more perfect mastication; especially is this true with the rapid eater. I much prefer a space under the manger where bedding can be stored during the day, and not be under foot, giving the floor a chance to dry out and purify during the day, which does not take place when the bedding or litter is scattered and under foot.—Rural New Yorker.

MANAGING THE HORSE.

Two Things Which the Trainer Should Develop Into Fixed Habits of Thought.

The affections of a horse are not inferior to his intellectual qualities; and, especially if made a pet, he becomes very fond of his master. In case of separation, he remembers him for years. But his affection is different from that of a dog, which continues to love his master even though the latter abuses him greatly. Rough, unkind treatment will quickly estrange the affection of a horse. Good horse sense discovers no particular reason why a horse should be devoted to a master who habitually maltreats him.

The intellect and affections of a horse point out two things so important to a trainer that he must bear them in mind until they become fixed habits of thought:

1.—Never, under any circumstances, allow a horse to successfully oppose his will to yours. If you do, he will remember it and (reasoning by experience) try it again.

2.—Always keep his affection. If he dislikes you, he has no wish to please you; and, if his obedience is always perfunctory, you will make but little headway in training him.

These two points assured, he will almost invariably try to do whatever you require of him—if he only knows what it is.—David Buffum, in Success.

Points of a Good Feeder.

Every part of the body of an ideal beef animal shows quality. It is this that tells the farmer whether a steer with a good form will prove a profitable feeder. It tells the butcher whether the animal will kill well. This is a point that cannot be overlooked and is difficult to describe. Lack of it shows in a coarse, fleshy head; in a thick, meaty throat and a rough, uneven shoulder. Coarse, heavy bones and a loose-jointed appearance generally will show the undesirable feeder; rough flesh, "ties" and "patches," the undesirable killer. The ideal animal handles well. The flesh is mellow and firm, showing a proper mixture of fat and lean. The skin is loose, but not superfluous; mellow and moderately thick, covered with a plentiful growth of hair. Such an animal usually weighs 1,500 pounds at 24 to 30 months.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Crowding and improper ventilation are the source of many losses in otherwise well regulated and managed flocks.

WAS MASSACRED BY THE ZULUS

A New England Maid Who Had Spent Several Years in South Africa Tells of Her Adventures and Privations.

He overtook her on the roadside while wandering for his health in the Berkshires.

"At last," he said, "I have found a typical milkmaid of old New England. See her big sunbonnet, her dress up to her shoe tops, her plain but neat calico, and the very pail itself. It is a morning for adventure and I will speak to her."

He quickened his walk and was soon near her, relates the New York Times.

"Fine morning this morning," he said. "I would like to help you carry the pail."

There was no reply, but he felt the roguish smile that he knew was hid under the sunbonnet. So he kept on doing all the talking until they reached the lane into which she was about to turn.

"Can I go with you?" he asked.

She turned and faced him.

"No, sir, you may not, nor do I desire your attentions. It is bad enough to have a groom-man splitting his infinitives, but when he shows his ignorance of the proper use of should and would and then caps the climax by using can for may, I think it is only my duty to tell him that the summer school is in session about ten miles from here."

A Great System.

A peddler entered one of the skyscrapers and proceeded to the thirteenth story. There ill luck overtook him and he was kicked down the stairway. The noise attracted the attention of tenants on the twelfth floor, who appeared on the scene in time to accelerate the motion of the unfortunate as he passed down to the eleventh floor. Successively and numerous additions to the propelling force as he passed each floor finally landed him in the street in a state of intense excitement. As soon as he could regain his feet and breath and behold the magnificent building and the height from which he had descended with such uniform and rapid progress, he remarked: "Mein Gott! Vat a system. Vat system der is in dot building. No elevator is needed!"—N. Y. Press.

"Taking" Matrimonial Fad.

Persons about to commit matrimony and victims invited to be present at affairs of the kind will be delighted to learn that a solution of the what-to-give problem has been invented in St. Paul, Minn. This scheme saves the bride the worry and peril of exchanging duplicate gifts, and relieves the givers of any amount of hard thinking.—Sault News-Record.

For Circuit Clerk.

We are authorized to announce S. E. TERRELL, of Idlewild, as a candidate for Circuit Court Clerk, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

By a vote of 158 to 146 the Republicans of Alabama indorsed Roosevelt for 1904.

Colorado Democrats want straight goods for their ticket, and resolved to not fuss with the populists.

Neely, the looter of the Cuban postoffice, has brought suit to recover the $6,000 Uncle Sam found in his possession when he was arrested.

In their haste to get the Congressional convention off of their hands, last Thursday, the Republicans failed to place Mr. Applegate on any platform.

Senator Morgan thinks that the only way to get even with the trusts is to tax them. That might work all right if the trusts would not get even again by doubling prices each time the levy was advanced.

It is reported from Rome that the volcano on Stromboli island is in full eruption and is throwing great columns of fire and torrents of stones. Large volumes of flame are also issuing from the crater of Mount Vesuvius.

The County Election Commissioners for this county having failed to meet and appoint precinct election officers within the time prescribed by law, the election officers appointed last year will hold the election again this year.

Editor Walton, of Lexington, who, for a while, desired the Democratic nomination for Railroad Commissioner, has quit the race, thinking that he could not successfully go up against the machine. Some excuse is better than none in all cases.

It is announced from London that the Boer leaders, Generals Botha, DeWet and Delarey, have had a conference with Colonial Secretary Chamberlain, and while nothing of much importance is likely to result, some slight modification of plans relative to the administration of affairs in South Africa may ensue.

Mr. Bryan said to friends while in Lexington, a few days since, that he is not a candidate for the Presidency, but that he is taking a good deal of interest in the selection of the man, wanting one who believes in the principles of Democracy and will have the courage to stand by his principles. That is just the interest any good citizen should take.

It is clear that the Democrats are laying too much stress on the effect the withdrawal of Speaker Hendersan from the race for Congress in Iowa, will have on the Republican party. That party has a way of closing up its ranks during election time that speedily overcomes the commotion created by the sulking of one, be he ever so prominent in party affairs.

Several Democrats attended the Republican Congressional Convention, last Thursday, and were surprised to hear the gentleman who put Mr. Applegate in nomination say that while Applegate was a Democrat he could get any office he asked for, when in fact Applegate asked for several nominations during that period and never came better than fourth if he did that well.

The Exs are coming to the front rapidly in the Republican party in this part of the State. Mr. Deering, candidate for Judge of the Court of Appeals and Mr. Applegate, Candidate for Congress on the Republican ticket in this district, are both ex-Democrats, while there is our own Col. Graddy, an ex-Democrat, holding the best office the Republicans had at their disposition in this county.

The most important meeting of Presbyterians ever held in Kentucky will be held in Lexington on Tuesday, October 14, the meeting being the centennial anniversary of the establishment of the Presbyterian Church in Kentucky. It will be a joint synodical meeting of the Northern and Southern Synods of this State. This will be the first time they have convened in a joint meeting since before the Civil War, the church having suffered schism on the slavery question at that period.

Crop and Stock.

The Irish potato crop this year is Kentucky is the finest ever grown in the State.

Talking about apples of gold, look at that Illinois man, who two years ago paid $11,000 for an old orchard, but for whose crop alone he has received $12,000.

B. F. Bryan, of Hardin county, tried a new variety of seed wheat this year which was warranted to be proof against fly or rust. It is called anti-Fly and Rust wheat. He sowed five bushels of it and threshed out sixty-five and there was not a fly in it. In the same field he sowed thirty-five bushels of ordinary seed wheat and on account of the fly and rust in it only threshed out seventy-five bushels.

Turkeys for the Thanksgiving dinner are going to be a luxury, both on account of scarcity and price. This conclusion is reached by buyers who have made a canvass of the country districts, says the Chicago Tribune. It is estimated that the turkey crop will be one half smaller than last year, and that prices at Thanksgiving time, when the fowl is most in demand, will be about 3 cents a pound higher than a year ago.

It is estimated that the broom corn crop this year owing to the destructive work of the chinch bugs will be from 15 to 25 per cent short of last year's crop, which was about 17,000 tons. It is said that a large number of growers have abandoned the crop to engage in stock raising. The prevailing price for broom corn is $110 per ton, but it is expected that $150 will be paid within the next few weeks. Illinois is the largest producer of this crop in the Union.

The attention of other nations is being more and more impressed with the fact that the United States embraces the only corn belt in the world and whose wide range of soil production is capable of growing meat of the best qualities, and most economically for feeding the world. The Argentine Republic seems to be the coming cattle growing country of South America. Cattle growers there have been importing pure bred cattle and are grading up their stock. Englishmen have recently gone there who have been looking to this country for a combination in the meat packing and exporting business, with the hope of controlling the markets of the world.

The following concerning the life of the farmer is true in every particular statement. The farmer doesn't have to solicit patronage from any one. He doesn't have to enter into competition and strife with any of his neighbors like a merchant; he doesn't have to wrangle for a living like a lawyer; he doesn't have to depend on his collection, reluctantly doled out, as creditors do; in fact, he can be the most independent man on God's green earth if he manages his business in a business-like manner. He has more time and opportunity for cultivatiug his mind; he has fewer allurements for corrupting his morals; and his occupation is more conducive to the highest development of his physical power than any other.

The weed crop is rank this year and to a considerable exteht weeds gather and contain much fertility. When plowed under they eurich the soil in humus for the growth of crops. It is far better to plow them under green than to burn them when cut and dried. It is the custom of some farmers to cut them and let them lie on the ground during fall and winter. But in this way much of the fertility stored up by them is lost. It is best to put them under the soil to rot, and then they return something to the land. They should be plowed under before the seeds mature, in order that they may not be propagated. The value of green manuring is well understood by all good farmers, and when we have the opportunity of rank growths like this, it is well to avail the soil of the benefits.

Former Gov. Horace Boies was nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Third Iowa district to oppose Speaker Henderson. He was declared to be a platform in himself and no resolutions were adopted.

Every week we entertain in our humble home a Kentucky friend that is most interesting to us. This friend comes with a message from people we honor and regard with a feeling akin to the kind a nice young man offers his best girl. This friend embodies in its conversation the very best thoughts of a man we especially hold in high regard, and would love to see this very night. We sit down and attentively listen to the conversation of this friend each week with just as much pleasure as we did 20 years ago. We enjoy hearing this friend talk about the sayings and doings of people all over Boone county through its representatives, who certainly must be a capital lot of folks, to say the least.

We would love to visit the office of this friend, grasp the chief's hand, look into his eye (that never flickered even before a fierce-eyed "Editor Killer," who carried a grievance in his vest pocket and two guns in his hip pockets), and tell him how glad we was to see him again.

We would love to drop in on Bro. Tolin at "Pete," who swings his quill with the grace and ease of the best of them, and eat just four watermelons with him.

We would enjoy dropping in on the Commissary quill driver, who slings oft more side ripping items of interest than any body, and who, certainly must be a jolly old boy, and start an acquaintance with him along the lines of fish eating, just to see how much he really knows about the political phases of Ky. life.

We should cut a pigeon wing of gladness and do a 22 story trappese act of joy to walk in on the irrepressible, unapproachable, automatic loading, self adjusting, rapid firing quill driver at Beaver, who never makes a funeral procession out of life, but rolls up regularly at meal times, smiling and happy as a Cuban with 10 American bard tacks in his pockets and answers, promptly, "here's me size, J Harmon Polly, Esq." We would sit down on a log and tell Harmon how a man can get up in the morning, feeling as if he might be the "whole affair," and before night undertake to knock a R. R. engine off the track, as we did last summer, to find out he is no more than a grass hopper in the world's history; then Harmon would quote Shakespeare as follows: "What fools ye mortals be," &c.

I would delight to drop in on the veteran quill pusher at Walton, who has grown gray, perhaps, in the cause of free speech and equal privileges to every body except some, as the Recorder teaches and every good man believes to be right; to hear him tell how Walton has grown and flourished like a bay tree since that prince of good fellows, Frank Bentz, came up there to live.

I never intended to pass from the Commissary to Beaver and not stop to see Bro. White, of Hathaway, and I wont, for no whiter fellow prances over the fertile hills and productive valleys of Boone than John, who drives his quill with a strict regard for facts (even when telling a fish story), and never fails to get the news. I would tell John to keep his eye on Joe Weaver, while we ate two fried chickens with him.

Would we love to see the Union quill pusher? Well we should say, yes! Isn't she the gentlest of the gentle, the kindest of the kind, the most truthful of the truthful, the newsiest of the newsey, the only quill pusher for the Recorder, who writes from the vantage ground of central location, where it is possible to hear more in five hours than mortal mind will retain in five years, the ground made famous by U. Loyd, Esq. Yes, we would love to hear Miss Mary tell about the Blade Club's doings for the last two years, tell of the rocks talking and cakes walking, of John Garrison and Matson Rachal getting in a hurry, of "Jonas" and his corn cob tobacco, of Uncle Frank Smith and his hog killing, of "Esq." Lynn as a dentist, and all about everybody and everybody's dog, and cat and chicken and cow and cabbage, for we shall always be interested in them. We would love to sit on the bridge over "Tiger" and gaze upon the good old village of Union, where hospitality holds high carnival and the latch string hangs on the outside four feet long with twenty-one meal tickets pinned on it every 6 inches, and think and think and then think again. We don't love Kentucky and Boone county in particular because of its "Warwicks of the Knobs," or its "Stringtowns on the Pike," but simply love them because it is them and because they have been to me a birth place and a dwelling place, where we have walked upon the hills of delight and waited in the valleys of the deepest sorrow our life shall ever know. We hope to drop in and be with Spencer and family before long, and from there radiate around among the boys like an old-time flint-lock rifle in a ferry boat collision, and have fun galore. Yours Truly,

Ed. Union Blade.

Civil Engineer Weaver has looked over a route for a traction road from Union to Ludlow by way of Constance. He says an easy grade can be obtained from Union to the river, and that it will pass through a territory which will furnish a very large volume of business. If it should be proposed to change the route as at present located from Union to the city to a route up Gunpowder via Limaburg to the city, those over whose lands the road would pass ought to give the enterprise all the encouragement within their power. It would give them advantages that nothing else can ever bring to them, and make that whole territory a suburb of the three cities that furnish a market for every thing the land produces. The closer you bring the producer to the consumer the greater is the former's advantage, and in these days of rapid transit, the community that is satisfied to continue in the beaten paths of their ancestors, will come out behind. The time has come when people must keep up with the procession or be run over.

The fastest game of ball witnessed here for a long time was that of last Saturday between the Petersburg and Burlington teams. Each of the pitchers was given unusually good support and not until the Petersburg bunched their errors in the seventh inning was there any certainty as to which team would be the winner. Burlington made one run in the first inning but was unable to get another man across home plate until the seventh, when six runs were made. Petersburg got but one man as far as third base, at which time each of the other bags was occupied, but Brady was equal to the emergency and put a stop to the visitors' flattering prospects. Petersburg put up a good game but Burlington had an unusually good line-up, and with the old battery, Brady and Hawes, was able to cope with most any amateur team. Saturday's defeat is the first Petersburg has chalked up this season. There were several fine plays made on each side, but Keene Souther, who played second for Burlington, was the star performer. Gordon pitched a good game and was well supported. Brady and Hawes were in their old form and their work was like that of a clock.

Following is the score by innings:
Struck out—Brady, 5; Gordon, 3.
Hits—Burlington, 4; Petersburg, 3.
Attendance—300.
Umpires—Riddell and Sandford.

The Burlington and Erlanger ball teams will cross bats at this place next Saturday afternoon. As these teams are well matched, an interesting game will be the result. The fun will begin at 2:30.

ONLY GINSENG HUNTERS,

And Ponte, the Much Wanted Outlaw, Is Still At Large.

Last Friday morning R. B. Huey, of Locust Grove neighborhood, came to town after Sheriff Allphin, believing that 8 or ten of his neighbors had the notorious negro, Ponto, surrounded in a house occupying a very secluded location not far from his house. The Sheriff was not in town and Mr. Huey returned determined, with the assistance of his neighbors, to bring the much wanted negro in. It was late in the afternoon before any further message was received from Locust Grove country, and when it came it was to the effect that neither of the strangers was Ponto. It seems that several days before a couple of colored men claiming to be from Madison, Indiana, had taken lodging in the house which is located on a branch and surrounded by lofty hills, making it about the most secluded spot in the county. From that place as headquarters the two men went forth every morning into the surrounding forest in search of ginseng, a large quantity of which they had dug and brought to the house. When it was discovered that two strange negroes were occupying the house that is almost shut out from everywhere, it was at once suggested that it was the thief, Ponto, and a companion, and this report spread like wild fire through the neighborhood, and in a little while the house was surrounded by a body of men eager to capture the supposed outlaw, but desiring to have someone with them, authorized to do that kind of work, Mr. Huey was detailed to secure the service of Sheriff Allphin.

When commanded the negroes surrendered without protest, and gave such a plausible reason for their presence in the neighborhood, that none of those present doubted the truthfulness of their statement.

This ends another chapter of the pursuit of Ponto.

Indications are that the first Monday in October will be a very lively day in Burlington. At 11 a. m. that day Hon. James M. Gaunt, of Carrollton, and President of the Tobacco Growers' Association, will make a speech on matters pertaining to the Association, and he would be pleased to have a large audience of Boone county tobacco growers.

In the afternoon United States Senator-elect James B. McCreary will deliver a speech on the political issues of the day. He is a very able man, and every Democrat in the county should hear his speech.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucus surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

FIGHT DECLARED OFF.

Corbett-McGovern Contest Will not Take Place in Louisville.

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 20.—Robert C. Gray, manager of the Southern club Friday night declared the twenty-round contest between Terry McGovern and Young Corbett, scheduled for next Monday night, off, as far as his club was concerned. Mr. Gray announced that the $30,000 worth of tickets which have been sold for the bout will be redeemed at any bank.

The Southern athletic club is out about $5,000, including the forfeit of $2,500 put up to insure the bringing off of the contest.

Although the Frankfort decision is conceded to be a knockout blow for boxing contests in Kentucky, there is some belief in Louisville that the fight will yet be held Monday night. Friday's injunction was against the Southern athletic club and Mr. Gray, and the latter announced Friday night that his club had severed all connection with the event and submitted to the court's decree.

At midnight it was announced that the fight was off absolutely and unconditionally.

Frankfort, Ky., Sept. 20.—The injunction granted Thursday by Judge Emmett Field, of the Jefferson circuit court, restraining the Southern athletic club and others from pulling off the McGovern-Corbett contest for the featherweight championship of the world at Louisville on Monday evening next was sustained by Associate Judge James D. White, of the court of appeals, Friday afternoon and the contest will not be held in Kentucky. Judge White invited the full bench of the court to sit with him and hear the case, which all but one member did, and the decision is one of the court, though the motion to dissolve the injunction was made before a single member of it. A majority of the court expressed the opinion that the glove contest which was enjoined in the lower court is a prize fight and that it is immaterial whether the purse was to be evenly divided. The six members of the court sitting divided equally on the most important legal question raised in the case, that of whether the chancellor had power to, by injunction, restrain the commission of a criminal act.

The argument of the motion to dissolve consumed five hours time, and Judge White filed his opinion after thirty minutes' consultation with his associates of the court. The argument attracted many of the interested parties to the court chamber, among them Manager R. C. Gray, of the athletic club. He was sorely disappointed at the action of the court, but stated that it was final so far as his club was concerned. He said that there would be no attempt to pull off the fight anywhere in Kentucky so far as he knew. The decision is, so lawyers say, so far-reaching that it will prevent all boxing contests in Kentucky in the future.

THE QUEEN IS DEAD.

Marie Henriette, of Belgium, Passed Away Suddenly.

Spa, Belgium, Sept. 20.—Marie Henriette, queen of the Belgians, died here suddenly Friday night at ten minutes before 8 o'clock. Neither her husband, members of her family, nor her majesty's doctors were present at the time of her death. She was seated at a table eating a light dinner when she was seized with an attack of syncope. Dr. Guillaume, who in the course of the day had remarked upon certain disquieting symptoms in the queen's condition, was summoned immediately, but her majesty was dead before he arrived. Two members of her suite were with the queen during her last moments.

TERRIBLE STAMPEDE.

Two Men Fighting Caused a Panic in a Colored Church.

Seventy-Eight Persons Are Dead as the Result of the Awful Crush at the Exit and About that Number Seriously Injured.

Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 20.—In an awful crush of humanity caused by a stampede in the Shiloh negro Baptist church at Avenue G and Eighteenth street, seventy-eight persons were killed and that many seriously injured. The catastrophe occurred at 9 o'clock just as Booker T. Washington had concluded his address to the national convention of Baptists, and for three hours the scenes around the church were indescribable. Dead bodies were strewn in every direction and the ambulance service of the city was utterly incapacitated to move them until after 1 o'clock. Dozens of dead bodies were arranged in rows on the ground outside the house of worship awaiting removal to the various undertaking establishments, while more than a score were laid out on the benches inside. The church is the largest house of worship for negroes in Birmingham, and the pastor says there were at least 2,000 persons in the edifice when the stampede began. People were standing in every aisle; even the entrance to the church was literally packed.

Just as Booker Washington concluded his address Judge Billou, a negro lawyer from Baltimore, engaged in an altercation with the choir leader concerning an unoccupied seat and it is said a blow was struck. Some one in the choir cried "They're fighting."

Mistaking the word "fighting" for "fire" the congregation rose enmasse and started for the door. One of the ministers quickly mounted the rostrum and admonished the people to keep quiet. He repeated the word "quiet" several times and motioned to his hearer to be seated. Again the excited congregation mistook the word "quiet" for "fire" and renewed the struggle to reach the door. Men and women crawled over benches, fought their way into the aisles and those who had fallen were trampled upon like cattle. The ministers tried again and again to stop the stampede, but no power on earth could stay the struggling, fighting mass of humanity. The screams of women and children added to the horror of the scene and through mere fright many persons fainted and as they fell to the floor were crushed to death.

THE PANAMA RAILWAY.

Line From Sea to Sea Guarded by United States Soldiers.

Washington, Sept. 20.—Secretary of the Navy Moody made public the following cablegram received from Commander McLean of the Cincinnati, the officer in command of the United States naval forces on the isthmus.

"Colon, Sept. 19.—Secretary of the navy: Washington—Have sent following communication to both parties: 'I have to inform you that the United States naval forces are guarding the railway trains and line of transit across the isthmus of Panamma from sea to sea; that no person whatever will be allowed to obstruct, embarras or interfere in any manner with trains or the route of transit. This is without prejudice or any desire to interfere in domestic contentions of the Colombians.'"

It was admitted by a high official of the navy department Friday that this government is seriously considering a further reinforcement of the United States naval force on the isthmus and that it is not at all unlikely that an additional force to operate along the line of railway will be ordered to the scene in a few days.

It is understood that there is no present intention to order more warships to the isthmus, as the navy department considers the vessels already there, or under orders, ample to meet any emergency which may arise on the waters.

It was stated in an authoritative quarter Friday that the information furnished by Commander McLean to the navy department plainly shows that the naval forces there is kept constantly on its guard to make good our treaty guarantee of free transit. So whatever additional force is sent will co-operate with the marines already there, and those en route, in a close watch on the railway.

ANTHRACITE COAL COMPANIES

Draft of a Bill to Appoint a Receiver in Certain Contingencies.

Philadelphia, Sept. 20.—Daniel H. McCarthy, a lawyer of Hazleton, Pa., visited Senator Quay at republican state headquarters here Friday and submitted to the senator the draft of a bill making provision for the appointment of a receiver to assume control of the anthracite coal mines under certain contingencies. Mr. McCartny recently submitted the same bill to President Mitchell of the United Mine Workers.

The measure authorizes the legislature to appoint a receiver for the coal companies on the ground that corporations have violated the state constitution, which provides, in Article 16, section 3, that charters and franchises of incorporated companies may be revoked if the business of the corporations is so conducted as to infringe the rights of individuals or the public welfare. It could not be learned what transpired during the conference, but McCarthy intimated that Senator Quay had agreed to give the subject his full consideration.

SPEAKER HENDERSON.

He Reiterates His Decision to Retire From Congress.

The Speaker Declared Himself in Perfect Accord With the Tariff Views of President Roosevelt as Enunciated in Cincinnati.

Chicago, Sept. 22.—David B. Henderson, speaker of the national house of representatives, passed through Chicago Sunday on his way to Atlantic City, where he will join Mrs. Henderson. Before leaving for the east Speaker Henderson reiterated his decision to retire from the congresional race in Iowa, denied any intention of "abdicating" his present position until his term of office shall have expired, and declared himself in perfect accord with the tariff views of President Roosevelt, as ennunciated in his Cincinnati speech.

"I have spent twenty years of my life figuring for protection for American industries and American labor, and I shall not be a party to any juggling at this late day," the speaker said. "President Roosevelt's tariff views set forth in his Cincinnati speech coincide with my own. There is no difference in our belief. His speech was a strong one and it has my hearty indorsement."

"Then the differences are confined to your own state?" was asked.

"Yes, largely. Let the new lights shine." The speaker smiled broadly as he used this phrase.

"Is there any chance of your friends prevailing on you to reconsider your action?"

"Absolutely none. I can not see my own way clear to gratify their wishes. It grieves me to remain firm with them, but it is a matter of principle. The pressure brought to bear on me has been strong. Senator Allison and a host of my old friends came to the station this morning to make a final assault on me. I had to say 'No.'"

"Will you resign from congress and give up the speakership before the end of your term?"

"I shall not," was the prompt reply. "My declination of a renomination is one thing and a resignation from congress is another thing. I shall serve out my term in congress, and I shall continue to fill the office of speaker. I have had no other intention."

The suggestion was advanced that "ideas" and "policies" in Mr. Henderson's home state might change after a brief period.

"Let the new lights shine," again came the answer.

When told that Secretary Shaw and Congressman Babcock were understood to be awaiting his arrival at Chicago, with a view of adding their efforts to those already made to induce him to recede from his position, Mr. Henderson's reply was:

"I am on my way to Atlantic City and shall arrive there Monday night."

When it was suggested that certain leaders had intimated that he was not loyal to his party by resigning, a shade of regret passed over the speaker's face, but he quickly said:

"The retirement of one man from an office can not affect the future of the party. When one steps aside another takes his place and the work goes on."

STRATTON'S WILL.

There Is a Probability that It Will Be Contested by His Son.

Colorado Springs, Colo., Sept. 22.—Nothing could be ascertained Sunday relative to the probability or possibility of a contest between heirs over the Stratton will, which gives $10,000,000 or more for a home for the sick. It is understood from a close friend of Mr. Stratton, that the son, I. H. Stratton, declared some time before his father's death that if the will did not give him a specified sum he would contest it, and that the sum left him is much less than the sum he named. He has not announced any intention of contesting, however, nor has he authorized the statement that is likely to.

It is said the newly mined coal all comes from the western end of Schuylkill county.

COMMERCE AND GENTILITY.

Run Of on Homemade Candy Made Sister Jane Nervous and Stopped Its Sale.

One of the most interesting pieces of character drawing in Hawthorne's work is the proud old New England woman, Hepzibah, in the "House of Seven Gables." Forced to keep shop, she used to wish that customers would not come to witness the fall of her pride and her fortunes. The Washington Post tells a similar story, the scene of which is laid in a Pennsylvania village.

Two old spinsters keep a little shop in which they sell pins and ribbons and other "small wares." Last summer a Washington woman saw a jar of homemade candy in their window, and bought some of it. It was so good that she bought more of it, and told all the summer visitors about it. There was a "run" on homemade candy, and the jar had to be refilled again and again.

One day the Washington woman called for some more of the candy, and was told that the sisters were out of it. A day later she called again, and the elder sister, with some embarrassment, said that they were still out, and recommended that she try the city-made candy at the drug store. This was not what the Washington woman wanted, so after two days she paid a third visit to the shop. Still the candy jar was empty.

"Aren't you ever going to have any more of it?" she asked.

The elder sister hesitated in obvious distress.

"I don't think we are," she said, at length. "You see, so many people got to running in here asking for that candy, and it made so much confusion, that Sister Jane got nervous about it. So we decided not to sell any more candy. We aren't going to keep it after this."

SPEECH AT THE FALL FESTIVAL.

We Do Not Wish to Destroy Corporations; We Wish to Make Them Subserve the Public Good, Says Roosevelt.

Cincinnati, Sept. 22.—President Roosevelt selected his visit to the Cincinnati Fall Festival as the best opportunity to fully seat forth his views regarding these momentous questions. The immense audience that gathered at the Music Hall listened to a comprehensive and carefully prepared speech. The following is a synopsis of his address:

"Many admirable qualities which were developed in the older, simpler, less progressive life have to some degree atrophied under the conditions of our rather feverish, high pressure complex and specialized life of today."

"The new conditions are here. They have produced both good and evil. We can not get rid of them—even if it were not undesirable to get rid of them, and our instant duty is to accommodate our social, economic and legislative life to them, and to frame a system of law and conduct under which we shall get out of them the utmost possible benefit and the least amount of harm."

"In dealing with the big corporations we intend to proceed not by revolution but by evolution. We wish to face the facts, declining to have our vision blinded either by the folly of those who say there are no evils, or by the more dangerous folly of those who either see or make believe that they see, nothing but evil in all the existing system, and who, if given their way would destroy the evil by the simple process of bringing ruin and disaster to the entire country."

OVER-CAPITALIZATION.

"The evils attendant upon overcapitalization alone are in my judgment sufficient to warrant a far closer supervision and control than now exists over the great corporations."

"Wherever a substantial monopoly can be shown to exist we should certainly try our utmost to devise an expedient by which it can be controlled."

"No problem, and least of all so difficult a problem as this, can be solved if the qualities brought by its solution are panic, fear, envy, hatred and ignorance."

"We do not wish to destroy corporations. We wish to make them subserve the public good."

"The biggest corporation, like the humblest private citizen, must be held to strict compliance with the will of the people as expressed in the fundamental law. The rich man who does not see that this is in his interests is indeed short-sighted. When we make him obey the law we insure him the absolute protection of the law."

"The line of demarkation we draw must always be on conduct, not on wealth; our objection to any given corporation must be, not that it is big, but that it behaves badly."

"If the policy advocated is so revolutionary and destructive as to involve the whole community in the crash of common disaster, it is as certain as anything can be that when the disaster has occurred all efforts to regulate the trusts will cease, and at the one aim will be to restore prosperity."

"Furthermore, the products of many trusts are unprotected, and would be entirely unaffected by any change in the tariff, or at most very slightly so. The Standard Oil Co. offers a case in point, and the corporations which control the anthracite coal output offer another—for there is no duty whatever on anthracite coal."

THE TARIFF LAWS.

"The real evils connected with the trusts can not be remedied by any change in the tariff laws. The trusts can be damaged by depriving them of the benefits of a protective tariff only on condition of damaging all its small competitors and all the wageworkers employed in the industry."

"You must face the fact that only harm will come from a proposition to attack the so-called trusts in a vindictive spirit by measures conceived solely with a desire of hurting them, without any regard as to whether or not discrimination should be made between the good and evil in them."

"We should not be made timid or deterred by the size of the problem; we should not fear to undertake it, we should undertake it with ever present in our minds dread of the sinister spirits of rancor, ignorance and vanity."

"We are neither the friend of the rich man as such, nor the friend of the poor man as such; we are the friend of the honest man, rich or poor, we intend that all men, rich and poor, shall obey the law alike, and receive its protection alike."

"I am not now considering whether or not, on grounds totally unconnected with the trusts, it would be wise to lower the duties on various articles, either by direct legislation or by legislation or treaties designed to remove so as to equalize more fully advantages from the various which which we trade. My point is that changes in the tariff would have little appreciable effect on the trusts, save as they shared in the general harm or good proceeding from such changes. No tariff change would help one of our smaller corporations or one of our private individuals in business, still less one of our wageworkers, as against a large corporation in the same business; on the contrary, if it bore heavily on the large corporation it would inevitably be felt still more by that corporation's weaker rivals, while any injurious result would of necessity be shared by both the employer and employed in the business concern.

FREE TRADE.

"The immediate introduction of substantial free trade in all articles manufactured by trusts, that is, by the largest and most successful corporations, would not affect some of the most powerful of our business combinations in the least, save by the damage done in the general business welfare of the country. Others would undoubtedly be seriously affected, but much less so than their weaker rivals, while the loss would be divided between the capitalists and the laborers, and after the years of panic and distress had been lived through, and some return to prosperity had occurred, even though all were on a lower plane of prosperity than before, the relative difference between the trusts and their rivals would remain as marked as ever.

"In other words, the trusts or big corporations would have suffered relatively too, and in the interest of its foreign competitors, but its relative position toward its American competitors would probably be improved; little would have been done toward cutting out or minimizing the evils of the trusts; nothing toward securing adequate control and regulation of the large modern corporations. In other words, the question of regulating the trusts with a view to minimizing or abolishing the evils existent in them is separate and apart from the question of tariff revision.

"You must face the fact that only harm will come from a proposition to attack the so-called trusts in a vindictive spirit by measures conceived solely with a desire of hurting them, without any regard as to whether or not discrimination should be made between the good and evil in them, and without even any regard as to whether a necessary sequence on the action would be the hurting of other interests. The adoption of such a policy would be temporary damage to all of our business interests, but the effect would be only temporary, for exactly as the damage affected all alike, good and bad, so the reaction would affect all alike, good and bad.

THE ONLY METHOD.

"The necessary supervision and control in which I firmly believe as the only method of thoroughly eliminating the evils of the trusts must come through wisely and cautiously framed legislation which shall aim in the first place to give definite control to some sovereign over the great corporations, and which shall be followed when once this power has been conferred by a system giving to the government the full knowledge which is the essential for satisfactory action.

"Then when this knowledge—one of the essential features of which is proper publicity—has been gained, what further steps of any kind necessary can be taken with the confluence borne of the possession of power to deal with the subject and of a thorough knowledge of what ought and can be done in the matter. We need additional power, and we need knowledge. Our constitution was framed when the economic conditions were so different that each state could wisely be left to handle the corporations within its limits as it saw fit.

"Nowadays all the numerous corporations which I am considering do what is really an interstate business, and as the states have proceeded on very different lines in regulating them they are often organized in a state in which they do little or no business and do an enormous business in other states to the spirit of whose laws they may be openly antagonistic. It might be better if all the states could agree to work along the same lines in dealing with these corporations, but I see not the slightest prospect of such agreement.

"Therefore, I personally feel that ultimately the nation will have to assume the responsibility of regulating these very large corporate concerns, which do an interstate business. The states must combine to meet the problem caused by the great combinations of capital; and the easiest way for the states to combine is by action through the national government. I am aware that the process of constitutional amendment is necessarily a slow one, and one into which our people are reluctant to enter, save for the best of reasons; but I am confident that in this instance the reasons exist.

A PROBABLE DIFFICULTY.

"I am also aware that there will be difficulty in framing an amendment which will meet the objects of the case, and yet which will secure the necessary support—the very fact that there must be delay in securing the necessary support—the very fact that there must be delay in securing the adoption of such an amendment insures full discussion and calm consideration on the whole subject and will prevent any ill-considered action. I have no intention of trying to outline the proper phraseology of such an amendment, for I knew it must come as a matter of agreement and discussion. But I sincerely believe that all these obstacles can be met, if only we face them, both with the determination to overcome them, and with the further determination to not do damage to the country as a whole, which on the contrary shall further our industrial development and shall help instead of hindering all corporations which work out their success by means that are just and fair toward all men.

"Without the adoption of a constitutional amendment my belief is that a good deal can be done by law. It is difficult to say exactly how much, because experience has taught us that in dealing with this and just where the lines dividing the rights and duties of the state and of the nation are in doubt it has sometimes been difficult for congress to forecast the action of the courts upon its legislation. Such legislation (whether obtainable now or obtainable only after a constitutional amendment) should provide for a reasonable supervision, the most prominent feature of which at first should be publicity; that is, the making public, both to the governmental authorities and to the people at large, the essential facts in which the public is concerned. This would give us exact knowledge of many points which are now not only in doubt, but the subject of fierce controversy. Moreover, the mere fact of the publication would cure some very grave evils, for the light of day is a deterrent to wrongdoing. It would doubtless disclose other evils with which for the time being we could devise no way to grapple. Finally it would disclose others which could be grappled with and cured by further legislative action.

"I advocate action which the president only can advise, and which he has no power in himself to take. Under our present legislative and constitutional limitations the national executive can work only between narrow lines in the field of action concerning great corporations. Between those lines I assure you that exact even-handed justice will be dealt, and is being dealt to all men, without regard to persons.

SELF-RESTRAINT NECESSARY.

"I wish to repeat with all emphasis that desirable though it is that the nation should have the power I suggest, it is equally desirable that it should be used with wisdom and self-restraint. The mechanism of modern business is tremendous in its size and complexity, and ignorant intermeddling with it would be disastrous. We should not be made timid or daunted by the size of the problem; we should not fear to undertake it, but we should undertake it with ever present in our minds dread of the sinister spirits of rancor, ignorance and vanity.

"We need to keep steadily in mind the fact that besides the tangible property in each corporation there lies behind the spirit which brings it success, and in the case of each very successful corporation this is usually the spirit of some one man or set of men. Under exactly similar conditions one corporation will make a stupendous success where another makes a stupendous failure, simply because one is well managed and the other is not. While making it clear that we do not intend to allow wrongdoing by one of the captains of industry any more than by the humblest private interest in the industrial ranks, we must also in the interests of all of us avoid cramping a strength which, if beneficially used, will be for the good of all of us."

JUMPED THE TRACK.

Fifteen Persons on an Electric Car Injured at Chicago.

Chicago, Sept. 22.—Fifteen persons were injured, two of them seriously, when an Elston avenue electric car jumped the track Sunday night, hurled over the curbing and across the sidewalk, tore down a wooden fence and dashed against the end of a house. The car was going at topmost speed. Those injured the most were hurled from the car. The motorman did his best to stop the car, but the brakes apparently did not work.

SHOT IN THE BREAST.

Dead from a Bullet Wound Inflicted by an Unknown Person.

Springfield, Ill., Sept. 22.—Eugene Miller, colored, aged 30, died Sunday from a bullet wound inflicted by an unknown person. Miller was found by a policeman and was sent to the police station, believed to be intoxicated. While being searched it was discovered that he had been shot in the breast. The injured man was taken to the hospital where he died. He refused to make a statement, which might lead to the arrest of his assailant. Miller leaves a wife and mother.

Shot and Killed His Father.

Woonsocket, R. I., Sept. 22.—Because he desired to protect his mother from violent treatment at the hands of her husband, and fearing also that his own life was in danger, William C. Bonin, aged 20 years, shot and killed his father, John B. Bonin.

THE ENCAMPMENT.

Third Annual Meeting of the Spanish-American War Veterans.

Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 22.—The third annual encampment of Spanish-American war veterans convened in the senate chamber of the state house Monday morning at 10:30 o'clock.

The encampment was called to order by Gen. Jas. B. Coryell, of Philadelphia, who is commander-in-chief of the order. Addresses of welcome were extended the veterans by Gov. Durbin on behalf of the state, and by Mayor Bookwalter on behalf of the city. Gen. Coryell responded and was followed by Senator Fairbanks. Senator Beveridge arrived Saturday night and also made an address. The encampment then adjourned until 2:30 p. m.

The afternoon session will be executive, and will consist in reading of the minutes, hearing the reports of the commander-in-chief, adjutant general and other staff officers, as well as those of the department commanders.

Gen. Coryell, accompanied by Mrs. Coryell, reached the Denison hotel at an early hour Sunday morning and attended a meeting of the executive committee. At this meeting many minor matters were attended to and arrangements for the camp fire, which will be held in Tomlinson hall Tuesday evening, were completed.

From early Sunday until long past midnight veterans from one end of the country to the other were continually arriving and were received at the Union Station by a section of the reception committee made up of members of the local camp of veterans.

Telegrams were received by Col. Harrison from Gen. Jacob H. Smith and Commander Richmond P. Hobson saying that they will reach Indianapolis Tuesday morning.

The campfire at Tomlinson hall Tuesday evening will be one of the features of the encampment—indeed the feature aside from the president's visit. Addresses will be made by Gen. Coryell, Gen. Starr, Commander Hobson, Gen. Smith, Senator Fairbanks and Senator Beveridge. Adm. George Brown will be present to represent the navy.

The chief feature of the encampment will be the presence of President Roosevelt here Tuesday, accompanied by a distinguished company. He will make an address from the balcony of the Columbia club after luncheon at the institution, and will also address the veterans.

It developed late Sunday night that several days ago Commander-in-chief Jas. B. Coryell, of Philadelphia, requested the resignation of Adjt. Gen. W. C. Lilier, charging him with insubordination and disobedience of orders. The adjutant general refused to resign and he was removed from office Sunday by the commander-in-chief, who appointed Capt. Frank S. Clark as his temporary successor. Clark has been acting as assistant adjutant-general.

Mr. Lilier, in an interview, said he will bring the matter up at Monday's meeting and fight the issue to a finish. Commander Coryell said he will ignore any attempt made by Lilier to bring the subject up before the encampment.

WILLIAM HOOPER YOUNG.

It Is Thought the Suspected Murderer of Mrs. Pulitzer Suicided.

New York, Sept. 22.—The search for William Hooper Young, the grandson of the late Brigham Young, of the Mormon church, the man wanted for the murder of Mrs. Joseph Pulitzer, whose mutilated body was found floating in the abandoned Morris canal at near Jersey City Thursday morning last, had, up to a late hour Sunday, been unavailing. The police forces of this and the surrounding boroughs have been bending all energies and running down all clews which come to them to locate Young.

The chief developments of the day came from Brooklyn, and it leads the police to believe that the fugitive has escaped to the vicinity of Canarsie, L. I. Capt. Titus, of the detective bureau, is inclined to believe that Young finding all avenues of escape shut off, has fled to this spot on the Long Island coast to commit suicide. The captain ordered a special force of detectives to Canarsie to conduct a thorough search of the neighborhood.

Derby, Ct., Sept. 22.—The police have in custody here a man who answers the description of William Hooper Young, of New York, who is wanted in that city for the murder of Mrs. Annie Pulitzer. STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR.

The Fourth Annual Meeting at Paducah, Ky., Adjourned.

Paducah, Ky., Sept. 18.—The fourth annual meeting of the State Federation of labor adjourned Wednesday. Also Legislators G. Allison Holland, of Henry county, and Lawrence Richart, of Louisville, and Editor C. C. Lewis, of the Shelbyville Sentinel, as enemies to organized labor, because they helped defeat the bill requiring the union label on all state printing. It was ordered that the legislative committee present a bill to stop convict labor from competing with organized labor, and the federation orders all union salesmen in the state to give preference to union made goods, and orders the typographical unions to insist that the union label shall be used on all union printing. The next meeting will be held at Frankfort, when the legislature meets in 1904. The officers elected were: President, Jos. McGill, Louisville, re-elected; first vice president, Jas. O. Wood, Central City, and secretary-treasurer, Miss Lula Johnson, Paducah.

THE VERDICT AFFIRMED.

Bankers Lose in Attempt to Dodge a Fine For Conspiracy.

Frankfort, Ky., Sept. 19.—The court of appeals Thursday affirmed the verdict and judgment of the Pulaski circuit court in the case of G. W. Walt and R. G. Hall, who were fined $1,000 each for conspiring to defraud the Somerset Banking Co. out of $40,000, Walt and Hall being president and cashier respectively of the banking company.

The appellants claimed that, as conspiracy is a misdemeanor and embezzlement a felony, and as the facts constituting the felony were alleged in the indictment and proved, there can be no conviction for the misdemeanor because it is merged in the felony. The opinion Thursday by Judge O'Rear is an important one, as it overrules the opinion of commonwealth vs. Blackburn, 1 Duvall 4, which sustained the appellants' contention.

We were told that Bert Worthington had made the statement that when he married he wanted his better half to be an adept in the art of cutting fire wood. Some one told him that unless he struck out that plank from his matrimonial platform that his prospect to become a bendict would be as slim as a boiter's chance of election. His answer was to the effect that he did not retract the statement, and considering the high price of coal, we infer that Bert will not commit matrimony for some time.

A few nights since Carl Puthoff concluded to go coon hunting and started out intending to annihilate the entire family of raccoons. He had not gone far when the dogs gave evidence that something was doing in a brush pile, near by. Thinking that it was a rabbit that dogs had "treed" in the brush, Carl walked upon the pile of brush, intending to scare the animal out from its retreat, when, ye gods and little fishes! about a peck of bumble bees began to assert themselves. Carl waited only long enough to learn that the bees were holding a business meeting and then started for home. He would have been running yet, had not Thos. Huron and John Melmon stopped him and told him that the bees were gone, or rather that he had outstripped them in the race from the brush pile. Carl says he doesn't like being with warm members, but bumble bees are entirely to torrid to suit him.

Richwood's "harmonious band" gave Mr. and Mrs. John Rice a delightful serenade, Thursday evening. John finally compromised after an hour of the most infernal racket over heard in Boone, and our band vamoosed. Any information regarding his whereabouts will be very thankfully received by "Beaverlick Smart Set."

Last Saturday, during service at the Baptist church, a horse belonging to Joe Cleek, which was attached to a buggy and hitched to the fence, became frightened and started at breakneck speed through town with the vehicle, but, by a fortunate accident, the buggy caught on something throwing the animal, which was soon caught by bystanders. Not much damage was done, but the incident created considerable commotion in the congregation.

We were overjoyed to learn the whereabouts of the "erratic Editor of the Union Blade," of whom we constantly wonder, and having now located him at Alexandria, Ind., among the patriotic (?) Kentuckians, Taylor, Finley, et al, we were made glad by his felicitous mention of our supernatural endowments, and inspired with a hope to meet him ere long on his native heath, to grasp his warm hand while we mutually exhaust our pathetic wing bags. Let us here often from you, Phillip.

Politics is very quiet here, but each party is having its troubles. We have the Joe Pugh Democrats and the anti-Pugh Democrats; the Dick Ernst Republicans and the anti-Ernst Republicans. If the Lord is a close observer of politics, He may know how Kenton county will go next month.

There was quite a destructive fire on Main street, West Covington, last Saturday morning. The fire was started in the home of John Threes, by a girl attempting to fill a lighted gasoline stove. The gasoline can exploded and before help could be secured the fire had made such headway that it was impossible to enter the house, and a 4 year old boy, who was asleep up stairs, was consumed in the flames. He was seen at a window, but before a ladder could be secured the floor fell in. His remains were found in the celler after the fire. Four houses were burned to the ground before the fire was stopped. The Ludlow fire company went to assist in putting out the fire, and had to lay 2,000 feet of hose to reach the nearest fire-plug, West Covington having no water service.

Several weeks ago Dock Mannin was at a loss to know how he would harvest his sorghum crop—experience has taught him a process—the English Sparrows began feeding on the seed and he began shooting them, so what the sparrows has not got he has shot down and all he has to do is to gather it up.

America's Famous Beauties

Look with horror on Skin Eruptions, Blotches, Sores, Pimples. They don't have them, nor will any one, who uses Bucklen's Arnica Salve. It glorifies the face. Eczema or Salt Rheum vanish before it. It cures sore lips, chapped hands, chilblains. Infallible for Piles. 25c at W. F. McKim's, Burlington; J. G. Oelsner's, Florence; Union Drug Store, Union; H. L. Eskew's, Walton; O. N. Grant's, Bellevue.

Born March 24th, 1902, Allie Clyde Casselman; died Sept. 1st, 1902, after a sudden and brief illness. "As the sparks fly upward" so this little soul returned to its Maker. What a transient existence and how true, that "life is a span, a fleeting honr." We rise up in the morning full of life and vigor, we lie down at the even, and we are numbered with the countless throngs of the ages. None escape, even the sweet babe must be gathered in the harvest, and we wonder why it was not spared, to have at least a glimpse of life's short day. Why should it be cut off in the first flush of life's new year? Who can answer, or what hide a mothers woe? L. C. Y.

The protracted meeting at the Baptist church has been well attended notwithstanding the very unfavorable weather that has prevailed much of the time since the meeting began. The discourses by Rev. Compton have been very able expositions of the Scriptures. Mrs. Everett Hall is the only addition up to the present time.

Out of Death's Jaws.

"When death seemed very near from a severe stomach and liver trouble, that I had suffered with for years," writes P. Muse, Durham, N. C., "Dr. King's New Life Pills saved my life and gave perfect health." Best pills on earth and only 25c at W. F. McKim's, Burlington; Union Drug Store, Union; J. G. Oelsner's, Florence; H. L. MEXICAN WAR VETERANS.

Paris, Ky., Sept. 26.—The thirtieth annual meeting of the National Association of Mexican War veterans was held here Thursday. Representatives from ten states to the number of 50 were present. Hon. F. L. McChesney made the welcome address and was followed by Hon. W. S. McChesney, of Lexington, Ky., who called the meeting to order in the absence of the late president, Gen. Hobson now deceased. Many other speakers addressed the body, chief of them being the veteran editor and soldier, Col. J. G. Craddock, who delighted his hearers with war reminiscences. The orator of the day was Col. W. C. P. Breckinridge, of Lexington. His speech was principally on the lines of expansion, and in the course of his remarks said, "The policy now pursued in the far Pacific is but the evolution of the policy forecast by the Mexican war."

The veterans were handsomely received and entertained at the homes of the citizens. A magnificent dinner was spread by the Daughters of the Revolution and the Daughters of the Confederacy. President Diaz, of Mexico, telegraphed congratulations. Autograph letters were also read from Mrs. U. S. Grant, Mrs. Jefferson Davis, Adm. Dewey, Secretary of War Root and Senator James McCreary. H. POWDER EXPLODES IN A MINE.

Six Men Instantly Killed and Eight Others Were Injured.

Covington, Va., Sept. 26.—A terrible explosion occurred at the Potts Valley iron ore mines, resulting in the death of six men. Eight miners were frightfully injured, but it is believed they will recover. The exact cause of the disaster has not yet been definitely established, but it is known that 40 kegs of giant powder exploded. The men were at work drilling in the mine and it is presumed that a spark from a lamp or an electric wire set fire to the powder. The dead victims were terribly mangled and the injured were quickly removed from the mine and medical aid summoned. One colored man is the most severely injured. The doctors amputated his left leg.

The victims were buried under tons of debris and their bodies were not recovered until morning. The mines are owned by the Victoria Furnace Co. at Goshen, Va. This makes the second mine disaster in this (Alleghany) county this month, four men having lost their lives at Stack mines a few days ago by a cave-in not far distant from Potts Valley.

TERRIBLE EARTHQUAKE.

One hundred persons were killed at Kashgar, in Eastern Turkestan, 400 in the village of Astyna, 20 at Jangi, while the town of Aksuksitche was completely destroyed.

Allanabad, India, Sept. 26.—A dispatch from Kashgar, Eastern Turkestan, says that only a dozen people were killed there in the earthquake, but that the disturbances wrecked many villages in the northern part of the province, the total persons killed being 1,000. There were no premonitory signs, says the dispatch, but a pronounced rise in temperature followed the principal shock. The temperature continued to rise during the subsequent days, which were attended by a repetition of slight quakes. The dispatch says no Europeans lost their lives.

THE ARMY CANTEENS.

Their Abolishment Responsible for an Increase of Offenses.

Saloons of the Lowest Type Have Been Established Just Outside the Boundaries of the Various Reservations.

Washington, Sept. 27.—Abolishment of the army canteen is responsible for a "deplorable increase of offenses in general and desertions in particular," according to the annual report of Brig. Gen. Frederick Funston, department of the Colorado. Gen. Funston declares that the ousting of the canteen by act of congress has lowered the discipline of the army, ruined scores of good soldiers and enriched saloonkeepers, gamblers and dissolute women. He explains the deterioration as follows:

"In my opinion there are two principal causes for this state of affairs: First, resentment of unaccustomed limitations and restrictions felt by men returning from field service to the monotony and routine of garrison life; second, the abolition of the canteen feature of the post exchange. Since this action was taken saloons of the lowest type have been established just outside the boundaries of the various reservations; their proprietors in almost every case unprincipled scoundrels who leave nothing undone to debauch the soldiers and obtain their money. Being in all cases outside the limits of any city the proprietors of these resorts are subject to no municipal police regulations and sell liquor regardless of hours and whether the buyer is already intoxicated or not.

"Gambling is universal in these 'dives' and they are frequented by dissolute women. The soldier whose desire for drink would ordinarily be satisfied by a few glasses of beer in the canteen of the post exchanges goes to one of these resorts and does well if he escapes before he has spent or gambled away all his money, overstayed his leave or engaged in an altercation. As a rule the local authorities regard the existence of these places with indifference or approval, as it causes the soldier to spend his money in the community. The efficiency of the army or the ruin of a good soldier is nothing to them. There can be no reasonable doubt that most of the trials by general courts-martial and summary courts, at least so far as this department is concerned, are directly traceable to this cause. Since I have had command here there has taken place the ruin and degradation of several non-commissioned officers of long service and fine record. In short, the recent legislation by congress on this question so far as this department is concerned has had no effect except to lower the discipline of the army, ruin scores of good soldiers and fill the pockets of a lot of saloonkeepers, gamblers and prostitutes."

SEVERAL ARRESTS MADE.

A Woman Found Murdered in An Alley in Chicago.

Chicago, Sept. 27.—With face and body terribly beaten, her clothing almost all torn away, Mrs. Hulda Swanson, who lived in Milton avenue, was found lifeless Friday night in an alley at the rear of a shoe factory at Kingsbury and Superior streets.

The alley runs along the track of the Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad and is particularly dark and lonely. It seems clear the woman was dragged into it and murdered. Several arrests have been made.

The Failure of the Current Crop Causes Emigration.

London, Sept. 27.—The Athens correspondence of the Standard draws attention to the exodus of emigrants to the United States, which he says is probably due to the failure of the current crops in Greece. MIGHTY AMERICA.

Roumanian Jews Encouraged Over Secretary Hay's Note.

Berlin, Sept. 26.—The Tageblatt Thursday prints a letter from Bucharest, capital of Roumania, dated September 22, as follows:

"The Washington note came like a ray of sunshine from a stormcloud for the Jewish population, especially the laboring classes, who conceived the hope that a favorable turn must result from the interference of mighty America. How naive these unhappy people are, eagerly reaching for any straw. But their jubilation has been of short duration. The only effect the American note has had so far is an order, according to the Roumanian newspapers, that no more emigration passports be issued without the usual tax of $4. It is even reported that no emigration passports will be granted. The spirit of the government is, 'We are masters here.' Nevertheless it is disposed to be polite and considerate toward the United States. It intends to show this by preventing emigration to the United States."

Berlin, Sept. 26.—Germany has decided not to associate herself in a formal manner with the American-British protests against Roumania's treatment of the Jews.

The German government adopts this attitude, it is understood, independent of other continental powers, no agreement having been reached in the matter among the cabinets on the continent.

Germany considers that other paraphrases besides Article 44 of the very precise Berlin treaty of 1878 have not been insisted upon. For instance, Roumanian forts have not been razed to the ground and Russia is allowing Batoum to remain as it was before the treaty. This is not the time to oblige Roumanians to observe any particular provision of the treaty. Besides, Germany, although sympathizing sincerely with the deplorable situation of the Jews in Roumania, feels unable to interfere in an internal question.

Germans are large holders of Roumanian securities, and an international storm over the policy to which Premier Sturdza, of Roumania, is fully committed, might cause his fall, and as a result Roumanian finances would be withdrawn from his capable control. A heavy drop in Roumanian funds would cause corresponding losses here.

MINERS STRIKE.

Three Hundred at the Tennessee Mine Are Out Temporarily.

Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 26.—Three hundred miners employed by the Tennessee Co. at No. 3 Pratt mine are on a temporary strike. The men went out because one man refused to pay an assessment of $1 a week for the benefit of the United Mine Workers who are idle in Pennsylvania. The local officers of the United Mine Workers requested the Tennessee Co.'s officials to deduct from every miners' wages $1 a week and turn it over to the organization for the striking Pennsylvania miners.

The company agreed to deduct from the wages of all miners who would give an order to that effect. In No. 3 mine at Pratt one man refused to give an order and the company's officials therefore did not deduct from his wages, holding that they had no right under the law or morally to deduct from a man's earnings without his consent.

The Present Census Bureau Will Be Employed in Compiling and Promulgating the Statistical Information.

Washington, Sept. 27.—President Roosevelt has issued an order to the effect that a census of the Philippine islands be taken. The order of the president is dated September 25. It recites the origin of the Philippine act which provides that complete peace shall have been established and the fact certified to the president, the census may be ordered which shall make inquiries relating to the population and ascertain as far as possible, such as taken in a census of this country. In his discretion the president may employ the present census bureau in compiling and promulgating the statistical information. The Philippine commission made the following certificates to the president in the form of a resolution upon which he issued the order for taking the census:

Resolved, That the Philippine commission hereby certifies to the president of the United States that the recently existing insurrection in the Philippines has ceased and a condition of general and complete peace has been established therein. That this certificate is made in accordance with the provisions of Section 6 of an act temporarily to provide for the affairs of civil government in the Philippine islands and for other reasons, and that the commission recommends to the president of the United States that he order a census of the Philippine islands to be taken in accordance with provisions of said act. Be it further

Resolved, That the foregoing certificates does not and is not intended to certify that the conditions ruling the Lake Lanao district in Mindanao, which district forms but a small part of the territory occupied by the Moros, are those of absolute and complete peace, but in the opinion of the commission, the language of Section 6 and the certificate therein provided for were not intended by congress to require before such census should be taken that complete peace should exist in the country of the wild Moros who never have taken any part in the insurrection referred to in Section 6.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS

SECOND OPERATION.

Surgeons Open the Abscess on the President's Leg.

There Is No Evidence Whatever of Any Matter That Would Produce Blood Poisoning—Will Soon Be Himself Again.

Washington, Sept. 29.—Another operation was performed Sunday on the abscess on the left leg of President Roosevelt. In the former operation a simple needle was used to relieve the trouble, but Sunday the surgeons with a knife made an incision into the small cavity, exposing the bone, which was found to be slightly affected. The president's case has been progressing satisfactory, but it is believed by the physicians that the operation made Sunday will hasten his complete recovery. While none of the doctors are willing to be quoted, they give the most positive assurances that there is not the least cause for alarm, and say, on the contrary, there is every indication of a speedy recovery, that the area of bone affected is very slight, and will not result in any impairment of the president's limb, and that there is no evidence whatever of any matter that would produce blood poisoning. They confidently expect that the president will be on his feet within a reasonable time, and with his robust constitution to assist recovery soon will be himself again.

Dr. Newton M. Shaffer, of New York, who long had been acquainted with the Roosevelt family and has attended the president's children at various times, and who also is a well-known bone specialist, joined the president's physicians in their morning consultation at 10 o'clock. It was noticed that there had been a slight rise in the president's temperature and an increase in local symptoms and the conclusion was reached that the patient's recovery would be hastened by making an incision of the wound for the purpose of relieving the slight tension or swelling which was present and also to drain the wound. The operation was performed between 2 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon. An application of cocaine was used to allay the pain. The president stood the operation very well and subsequently expressed satisfaction at the successful result. Dr. Rixey, the surgeon general of the navy, performed the operation, assisted by Dr. Lung, the president's regular physician. Dr. O'Reilly, who also was present with the other physicians, is the surgeon general of the army, and heretofore has been consulted regarding the case. Dr. Edward R. Stitt, another of those present, is in charge of the naval museum of hygiene and medical school.

The physicians Sunday night took a rosier view of the president's prospects of getting out again. He has become somewhat restive because of his close confinement and the physicians are considering the advisability of permitting him to take a ride in a few days. The physicians say the question now is simply one of the healing of the wound and reiterate that this will be hastened by the operation made.

TERRIBLE CRIME.

Woman Choked to Death and Her Niece Assaulted.

Mobile, Ala., Sept. 29.—Mrs. Helen Dickson was choked to death and her niece, Miss Helen Robertson, was assaulted early Sunday morning at their home by an unknown man, supposed to be a Negro bent on criminal assault.

The murderer climbed through a window into the room where Mrs. Dickson, her 3-year old son, Albert, and her niece, Miss Robertson, were sleeping, and after closing and bracing the door leading into a room where Miss Robertson's father was sleeping, strangled Mrs. Dickson into insensibility and had clutched Miss Robertson by the throat when she screamed, frightening the intruder away.

"Nurse Alice Kemmer, army nurse corps, having been granted leave of absence, voluntarily relinquished the same and took upon herself the care of two smallpox patients in an isolation hospital. One of the patients was the wife of an officer, the other an enlisted man. Miss Kemmer had never had the disease, nevertheless she fearlessly entered upon her self-imposed task and through the months of April and May, 1902, devoted herself to the care of the patients, living in the room with the officer's wife, the enlisted man being in an adjoining room. With never more than two hours sleep at a time, intensely hot weather, the nurse attended her patients day and night and saved their lives."

Gen. Chaffee then commends her bravery and conscientious performance of duty.

The inland was swept for several milometres, doing enormous damage, while there were violent submarine agitations between Sicily and the main land. Along the railroad from Catania to Palermo, the force of the cyclone was such that rails were torn up and hurled to a great distance.

It is reported from Modica (32 miles west southwest from Syracuse) that a hundred bodies have already been found, but that the number of dead bodies swept away by the torrent is unknown.

The newspaper Practissa expresses the belief that some 400 people have been killed.

The torrent destroyed everything on the ground floors in Hevis and the lower portions of Modica. Bridges and roads have disappeared and damage amounting to many millions of lire has been done. (A lire is worth about 20 cents.)

BURNED AT THE STAKE

Tom Clark Confessed to Assault, Murder and Robbery.

Clarke Also Confessed to Killing Two Men on An Excursion Train and to the Theft of $1,500 From a Physician.

Corinth, Miss., Sept. 29.—Writhing in the flames of burning fagots, piled high by hundreds of citizens, Tom Clark alias Will Gibson, a young Negro, was burned at the stake here at a late hour Sunday, after having confessed to one of the most atrocious crimes in the history of North Mississippi, the assault and murder of Mrs. Carey Whitfield, on August 19 last. Before the torch was applied Clark stated that he deserved his fearful fate.

Last August Mrs. Whitfield, the wife of a well-known citizen, was found dead in her home. Investigation showed that the woman had been assaulted and her head was practically severed from her body, a razor having been used in the bloody work. Both Whitfield and his wife were related to several of the most prominent families in the south and the indignation of the people knew no bounds. Corinth and the surrounding country was scoured in an effort to apprehend the murderer, but diligent search failed to disclose his identity. Two detectives from Chicago were employed by the family, but their efforts were fruitless. Several suspects were arrested but in each case an alibi was proven. A committee of 12 citizens were named to continue the search for the murderer and they have been active in the work. On Monday last it became known that Tom Clark, a Negro living near here, had trouble with his wife and the latter threatened to disclose the secret of a crime. An officer apprehended the woman and she told enough to warrant the belief that Clark had murdered Mrs. Whitfield. Clark was arrested and on Saturday was before the committee of 12 in Corinth. The Negro finally confessed to the murder and also told of other crimes that he had committed. He said that several years ago he killed two men on an excursion train in Mississippi. He told of an outrage perpetrated by him upon a Negro woman and also of the theft of $1,500 from a physician at French Camp, Miss. Clark said that he had never been suspected of committing any of these crimes.

After hearing the confession the committee decided that the Negro should be executed, Clark said he deserved death, but asked that the execution be delayed until Sunday so that he could have a farewell interview with his mother and brother who lived in Memphis. The request was granted and the two relatives were telegraphed for but it was learned that they were in Mississippi.

THE MORO POSITION.

A Second Expedition in Command of Capt. Pershing Sent Against It.

Pershing, of the 15th infantry, and is composed of a battalion of infantry, a troop of cavalry, three sections of artillery and a detachment of engineers. The engineers will construct a pontoon bridge and a corduroy trail across the swamp which flanks the land side of the Maciu forts. This work will occupy several days. Rafts will probably be used to attack the fort from the lake side. The actual date of the assault upon the forts is indefinite.

The sultan of Butig had been made a prisoner by the American forces and was subsequently released. He furnished the Americans with horses to transport their supplies.

PERRINE'S COMET.

It Is Now Very Visible to the Naked Eye, and Is Growing Brighter.

San Jose, Cal., Sept. 29.—Prof. W. W. Campbell, of Lick observatory, sends out the following:

"The comet discovered at Lick observatory on September 1 by Prof. C. D. Perrine has grown steadily brighter as predicted until at the present time it is very visible to the naked eye. For the benefit of those who may care to observe it, I give its approximate position as follows:

"September 28, very close to the second magnitude star Alpha Cassiopeiae; September 29, about two degrees south of the second magnitude star Beta Cassiopeiae. It then enters upon the milky way and will for some days probably not be so readily determined. On the evening of October 6 it will be about three degrees north of Alpha Cygni. The comet should then be two or three times as bright as it is at the present time. It will continue to move rapidly to the southwest, overtaking the sun early in November."

THE PENSION ROLL.

Total Number of Names Enrolled July 1, Was 999,446.

Washington, Sept. 29.—The annual report of the commissioner of pensions, Eugene F. Ware, made public Sunday, shows that the number of names on the pension rolls still is under the million mark, despite a net gain of 5,732 pensioners since 1898. The total enrollment July 1 last was 999,446, against 997,735 last year. The total comprises 738,809 soldiers and 260,637 widows and dependents. The aggregate includes 4,695 pensioners outside the United States.

The number of death notices of old soldiers, not now in the service, received by the bureau during the year was 50,128; but only 27,048 of them were pensioners.

The report says that the death rate among the pensioners for the coming year will be about 40,000, and the losses to the rolls from other causes will be about 6,000. The total amount paid for pensions during the fiscal year was $137,504,268 and the yearly cost of operating and maintaining the bureau and the agencies outside of the payment of pensions proper, aggregates $3,590,529. The pension system, says the report, since the beginning of the government has cost $2,992,509,019, exclusive of the estimate of the soldiers homes. The pensions disbursement by the United States from July 1, 1790, to June 30, 1865, were $96,445,444.

The following amounts have been paid to soldiers, their widows, minor children and dependent relatives on account of military and naval service during the wars in which the United States has been engaged:

Revolutionary war (estimated), $70,000,000; war of 1812 (on account of service without regard to disability), $45,025,297; Indian wars 1832-1842 (on account of service without regard to disability), $5,814,207; war with Mexico (on account of service without regard to disability), $31,861,338; war of the rebellion, $2,744,878,276; war with Spain, $3,275,184; actual total disbursement in pensions, $2,900,854,302.

The amounts paid as pensions on account of disability and deaths as results of military and naval service during the wars of 1812, and with Mexico, and in time of peace, to the beginning of the war with Spain, are included in the payments on account of the war of the rebellion.

It is estimated that $16,000,000 were paid in pensions for disabilities and deaths due to military and naval service in the wars of 1812, and with Mexico, and during the time of the peace prior to the war of the rebellion, making the payments of pensions to soldiers and sailors of the war of the rebellion and of the regular military and naval estimates since the close of said war of the rebellion, and their widows, children and dependent relatives, amounting to $2,728,878,276. This is outside of the cost of maintaining bureau agencies and soldiers homes.

INVESTIGATION of President Roosevelt's statement at Cincinnati that anthracite coal is on the free list shows him to be in error. The only decision ever rendered by the Board of General Appraisers held such coal to be dutiable. It also held that the intention of Congress in passing the Dingley tariff act was to tax imported coal.-Philadelphia Herald.

THE Controller of the Treasury sustained the contention of Capt. C. C. Colhoun relative to Kentuck's Spanish War claim, and a warrant for $120,860,63, an excess of $52,900,03 over the original allowance has been drawn on the United States Treasury. AN interesting report from Washington is to the effect that the prairie dog has become so serious a problem in the west that the national government has taken the matter up and the department of agriculture has recommended the use of poison to exterminate them. The states in which the most damage is reported comprise Montana, Western Kansas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Northern Texas.

As an incident of the dynamiting of the Golden Eagle Hotel, in Washington, a false report was published and placarded in London that President Roosevelt had been murdered. The hotel was dynamited by Frank McKie, and he committed suicide. His act is supposed to have been induced by a quarrel with the proprietor of the hotel over some female member of the proprietor's family. No one in the hotel was killed by the explosion.

THE Treasury Department has begun distribution of $38,500 the sum received from Spain, one of the annual payments of indemnity by the treaty of 1834. American merchants' ships were destroyed by Spanish National vessels, and an award was made in favor of the United States citizens. By a rule of international law war absolutely extinguishes treaties, but the Spanish Government did not regard itself as thus relieved by its recent war.

Never feed hogs with the idea that they are able to convert any and all kinds of food into good wholesome pork. To obtain good meat, it is necessary to feed those foods that will make it, and in such a manner that it will be clean and wholesome. Do not change the diet too suddenly and especially from green to dry food. Have a clean feeding place, a tight floor is the best, and no matter what kinds of slops are fed give daily plenty of pure fresh water.—Western Swine Breeder.

THE number of souvenir gold dollars to be minted for St. Louis is 250,000 half of which will bear the bust of President McKinley and the other half that of Jefferson. The fair corporation will charge $2 apiece for them, thereby netting $250,000 in cash if all are sold. The first few hundred will be numbered from 1 up, and competition for the small figures is expected to be lively. It would not be surprising if No. 1 McKinley and No. 1 Jefferson should bring $5,000 apiece. But each dollar should have a hole in it, so that it may be carried on a string, and this without affecting its value as currency.

The Portland Oregonian calls attention to the fact that the growth of the sheep industry in the Rocky mountain states in the last quarter of a century has been enormous. It has, in fact, been created in that section within that period, this being especially the case in Montana, which state, as is shown by special reports published by the Department of Agriculture, now leads in sheep raising and the production of wool. About twenty-five years ago the first band of sheep was taken into Montana, and this small flock has increased until now, according to the department's figures, there are over 6,200,000 sheep in the state, or more than one-seventh of the woole number in the United States. In the year 1901 there were 8,000,000 lambs added to the flocks of Montana, and 14,000,000 pounds of wool were produced at an average of 13.48 cents a pound. Prosperity speaks in facts like these.

THE people of the United States now consume eight times as much sugar per capita as they did in the first quarter of the last century, four times as much as the average per capita during the decade ending with 1850, and twice as much as they did in any year prior to 1870. In the years immediately prior to 1825 the average consumption of sugar was about 8 pounds per capita; in the decade 1840-50, about 16 pounds per capita; in the years immediately prior to 1870 the average was about 32 pounds per capita (omitting the war years, in which the consumption was light); from 1870 to 1880 it averaged about 40 pounds per capita; from 1880 to 1890, 50 pounds per capita; in 1891 the figure was 66 pounds per capita, and has ranged from 62 to 68 pounds per capita since that time, the figure for 1901 being 63.4 pounds. This steady growth in the per capita consumption of sugar is shown by some figures which the bureau of statistics will present in the next issue of its annual volume, the "Statistical Abstract." The per capita consumption has been a matter of record during recent years, but it has not been before practicable to compare the per capita consumption of recent years with that of earlier years and to note the very rapid increase in the quantity consumed by each individual of the country.

Cappa will give an entertainment at Bullittsville Christian church next Friday night. The program will be very interesting consisting of mall quartetts, solos, duets, mixed quartetts, instrumental music, recitations, &c., &c. The weather last Saturday afternoon, was very unfavorable for playing base ball, until 3:30 when it settled down, and shortly after 4 the Burlington and Erlanger teams hitched up here for what proved to be a very interesting game. Each team had a strong line-up and was out for the other's scalp, and when the first man up for Erlanger made a clean base hit of the first ball thrown him, the boys from across the line thought all they had to do was to hit and run. But not so. Brady put on more steam and when the game was concluded they had succeeded in making one double and three singles. The Burlington crowd had considerable difficulty in connecting with the curves dished up by Powers, but succeeded in hitting him for one home run, two doubles and three singles, which netted them a very handsome victory.

In the first inning each team made one run, and thus the game stood until the sixth, when Burlington made five hits and five runs. It was in this inning that Brady made a clean home run, knocking the ball so far into the left field that it bounded over the fence into the road. This let Burlock in with a run also. This piece of stick work on the part of Brady created pandemonium, and when he crossed the home plate, it looked for a minute or two like the rooters were so overcome with enthusiasm that they would tear him to pieces. This turn in affairs appeared to demoralize the Erlanger boys, and before they could retire their opponents three more of them had crossed the plate. Erlanger came to the bat and made two hits but was unable to get a man across the plate before the side was retired.

The first baseman on each side is charged with two errors, but they were excusable from the fact that the sun blinded them and the ball had to be thrown so low as to make it difficult to field it.

The features of the game for Burlington was Hughes' long run and catch of a foul fly to the left in the 5th inning and Brady's home run in the 6th, winning his own game, which up to that time was in doubt. Brady's and Hawes' work was faultless, Brady sending the balls in sizzing hot and Hawes taking them without a flinch, standing like a stone wall behind the batter. Ficke carried off the batting honors for Erlanger, having one single and a two bagger to his credit, while the battery work executed by him and Powers was admirable. Ficke's throwing to second was very troublesome to the Burlington pilgrims, while Victor at third and Gurney at second each did excellent infield work and were responsible for much of the slaughter at first. The Erlanger boys are so nicely behaved on the ball field that they have gained the admiration of all those who attend the game here.

The Burlington and Bellevue teams will cross bats here next Saturday afternoon, and on next Monday, county court day, the Erlanger and Burlington teams will cross bats here at 3 p. m.

Quite a good crowd attended Dr. Smith's sale last Saturday afternoon, but articles brought small prices, with few exceptions. Dr. Smith and wife have a large circle of friends who are sorry to see them leave the town, and they take with them the best wishes of all. Mrs. Smith will go to St. Louis and spend the winter with her adopted daughter, Mrs. Frank Smith and the Doctor will spend the winter with his children in the South. It is probable that St. Louis will become their place of future abode.

The damp weather last week injured the tobacco many hundred dollars in this county. A great deal was taken out of the house to prevent its rottening, but much of the work amounted to little or nothing, as the damage occurred so very rapidly when began.

The upward flight in the price of coal will bring distress to many a poor person in the large cities. The charitable organizations work hard to protect these people from the pangs of the cold, but they cannot locate and assist all of the needy, while many who are unworthy take advantage of their good work.

A Cincinnati commission man, who had been canvassing for his business in this county, called on the RECORDER the other day, and planted an advertisement in its columns. He said, "Everywhere I go in Boone county I find the RECORDER, and I believe it is the best medium through which to reach the people, and I will give it a trial."

His Life in Peril.

"I just seem to have gone all to pieces," writes Alfred Bee, of Welfare, Tex., "biliousness and a lame back had made life a burden. I couldn't eat or sleep and felt almost too worn out to work when I began to use Electric Bitters, but they worked wonders. Now I sleep like a top, and eat anything, have gained in strength and enjoy hard work." They give vigorous health and new life to weak, sickly, run-down people. Try them. Only 50c at W. F. Architect Haniford, of Cincinnati, came out last Saturday and examined the court house, under employment of the committee appointed by the fiscal court, to have the building inspected. Mr. Haniford attributes the cracks in the walls to the south wall of the foundation, the bottom of which he says is too near the surface of the grouud. He made several recommendations, the principal of which is the lowering the ceiling in the circuit court room by putting in a steel ceiling. This he believes will improve the acoustic properties of the room.

To The Boone County Christian Sunday Schools:

Since the meeting of our convention my school has adopted a new plan for securing pupils, and so far it has proven very satisfactory. The plan is very simple. We choose up as for an old-fashioned spelling match. As a starter I selected two young ladies for leaders, calling one the Blue and the other, the Red, and it has been agreed that at the end of three or four months the losing side shall give its successful opponents a supper.

The contest is as follows: Suppose each side has 50 pupils the first Sunday as a starter, the point is to see which can add the most new or irregular pupils on the next Sunday and to see that everyone of the original 100 is in attendance. Each teacher is supplied with a card, and as they call the roll of their classes the pupils answer "red" or "blue," and the teacher records the number of each on the card, which is taken up with the collection, after which the secretary ascertains and announces the number of each present by writing it on the black-board.

I do not claim this as original, but believe it a good plan to suggest to new schools, believing that its adoption will be a great advantage to them. It gives the pupils something to work on, something to strive for, something to talk about, and we need the last mentioned, and if it is Sunday-school every day in the week it is bound to win both for the school and Christ Jesus.

In conclusion I desire to say that it is my greatest ambition to secure a large class of old people in our school, and I earnestly request all, regardless of age or religious belief, to come to our school and help us out. I believe your presence will encourage the children. Try it a while.

Text: "And the Lord said unto Satan, Whence comest thou? Then Satan answered the Lord and said: From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it."—Job 1:7.

A Remarkable Interview.—God's Word opens up to us in the story of Job a most startling vision of the unseen and spirit realm. Satan is revealed to us standing in the presence of God and talking with Him regarding events in the earth. During the period antedating the creation of man Scripture intimates that one of the angels of Heaven, who was very high in the counsels of God and exercised great power in the spirit realm, rebelled against the authority of the triune God and was cast out with those who had joined him in his insurrection. Christ declares in Luke 10:18 that He "beheld Satan as lightning fall from Heaven," so that limited as our knowledge is regarding this tremendous mystery of the spirit world we know there was a portion of God's universe from which Satan was forever banished. But he seemed still to have access to a place where he could meet and talk with God, and our text represents such an occasion.

It may even be that Satan was obliged to appear at the will and command of God, to regularly give an account of his activities in the earth to which he had been banished, for while his power was very great and he was in rebellion against God, it is but reasonable to suppose that the Supreme Ruler of the universe still exercised certain restrictive powers over him. The moment Satan rebelled against God his doom was sealed, but He Who is from everlasting to everlasting, Jehovah God, the great I AM, works on a gigantic plan, and the destruction of Satan was to be wrought out by a marvelous system of redemption in which sin was to be forever punished and the righteousness of God was to be gloriously triumphant.

Satan's Activity.—The context from which our text is taken declares that Satan appeared before the Lord. Who said unto him: "Whence comest thou?" To which Satan, seemingly in an offhand and evasive way, replied: "From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it," intimating that he had things pretty much his own way. He went to and fro in the earth exercising dominion and power and apparently meeting no opposition. He walked whither he would into the homes and into business, into pleasures and human loves, into sorrows and afflictions and into death itself where he foreclosed the mortgage on the soul and held it to his eternal destruction. In the period of the world's history during which Job lived Satan seems, as we have said, to have had things in the earth pretty much all his own way. The print of the hoof could be traced hither and thither through the whole earth. What an indefatigable traveler he was and how unceasing and untiring in the oversight of his dominions! Back and forth, back and forth; up and down, up and down, until the hoofprints no longer marked a trail, but filled in unbroken confusion the fair face of the earth God had created. And since the days of Job he has not ceased his travels or his activity, but continues now, as then, in "going to and fro in the earth and walking up and down in it."

Wherever there is a human soul there the hoofprints of the Devil lead, and he uses his best endeavor to lure that soul away from God. Peter holds up a roaring lion as a picture of the way in which Satan goes about seeking whom he may devour. Unrelenting in the pursuit of his prey, displaying the utmost cunning in tracking and seizing it, and fierce and cruel when once the prey is within his powerful jaws, what a glimpse Scripture gives us of the Devil. And it is a true and faithful picture, too. But you must not forget that he goes around in disguise and dons sheep's clothing or appears as an angel of light. But under the sheep's clothing and behind the angelic vision of light there is still the lion nature which is ready to tear to pieces and destroy as soon as the yawning jaws have safely closed upon the intended victim.

Satan has been dealing with human nature for thousands of years, ever since he made Adam and Eve believe a lie in the Garden of Eden, and poor man is but a puppet in his hands. His artfulness and ingenuity in compassing the destruction of a soul are almost infinite. By the music of the world's pleasures and the glitter of its tinsel he drew the whole world after him into the flood of God's wrath, and only Noah and his household with seven his wives and were saved. He [illegible] up the cities of Sodom and [illegible] with riches and luxuries, and [illegible] them so full of sensual [illegible] wickedness that the [illegible] were indifferent to the [illegible] to warn Lot. [illegible] Devil [illegible] marks of the cloven hoof. The black stains stretch from the snowcapped, icebound mountains of the north to the regions of the antarctic. They girdle the earth from east to west in endless and interminable windings. They invade the sacred precincts of the home, they trample over the fair names of cities, states and nations, they trail through kings' palaces and trace their presence in legislative halls and executive mansions. Commercial and industrial life echoes with the tramp of the devil's feet; the social and ecclesiastical spheres feel the trembling and shaking of his coming and going. Take your newspaper which records the doings of a day and follow through page after page the hoofprints of the prince of this world. Murders, robberies, drunken brawls, social scandals, divorces, political corruption, forgeries, defalcations, embezzlements, domestic and neighborhood quarrels, law suits, strikes and lockouts, oppression, selfishness, distress and sickness and woes of every description. Oh! how the devil is ravaging this earth to-day as he goes hither and thither. No soul has ever come into the world that has not met him and felt his power. You have met him. You are meeting him day after day. Look for the hoofprints and recognize his presence.

Satan is a great student of human nature. He knows your every weakness, your natural tendency, he keeps a record of all your past failures and mistakes and sins, and on occasion throws them up at you to discourage you and to prove to you that there is no use of trying any more to do right. He knows your family history from your first ancestors down, and understands your inherited weaknesses. He is a great strategist and knows from what point to make his attack. If he cannot lure by some dainty and attractive bait, he will try to goad to desperation and drive you to do his will.

Our Responsibility.—We are not to blame for Satan's presence in the world; we are not to be held accountable for his activity; we cannot even be condemned because he besets us on every hand and tries to lead us astray. Our responsibility begins only when we yield to the temptation. We are certain of meeting Satan. As he goes to and fro in the earth it would be strange indeed if we did not meet him or some of his emissaries. Until he is chained by the Lord during the millennial period, we cannot find a place on this earth where his hideous and unwelcome presence may not penetrate. We are not to blame because he whispers in our ears and seeks to entice us into forbidden paths and wicked indulgences, but we are to blame when we link our arm in his and let him walk with us while he explains to us how the wrong can be done and covered up, how the dishonest act can be committed and not found out, how the appetite and lusts can be indulged and the harvest of wrecked home and ruined life not be reaped.

David was not to be blamed because his palace had a delightful and cool promenade on its roof; it was not his fault that a lovely and beautiful woman posed before an undraped window looking out towards his palace walls, but he was responsible for allowing his eyes to be the channels through which sinful desires and purposes might enter his heart. He was not to be condemned because Satan was at his side that night, but it was his fault because he let him argue with him and lead him step by step into the awful sin.

Peter was not to blame because Satan wanted to sift him as wheat, but he was to blame for following his Lord so far off as to become a coward and thus fall an easy victim to Satan through the chiding of a young maiden.

Our Saviour, Jesus Christ, met Satan repeatedly during His earthly life. He was tempted in all points like as we are and yet without sin, because at the point of temptation refuge was found in God's Word and "Get thee behind me, Satan," drove the demon from his presence. Resist the Devil and he will flee from you. Give not place to the Devil. You cannot shut him out of the world, but you can keep him from trespassing upon the domains of your heart and life.

The World's Struggle.—The world is making an heroic struggle in battling against Satan. It is bringing its culture, its wisdom, its power and influence, its laws and its penal and reformatory institutions to bear upon the works of Satan, and it does not cause the arch fiend one anxious moment or single troubled thought. Our Lord in His parable of the man and the unclean spirit gives us a picture of the world in its efforts to get rid of the Devil and his works. The man succeeded in driving out the unclean spirit which was disfiguring and distorting his life. He sweeps out all the filthiness left behind by the demon and then proceeds to garnish his heart with culture and refinement and wisdom of the world. And while he is beholding with satisfaction what he has been able by his own effort to accomplish, behold the unclean spirit, weary with his wanderings, returns, and, finding such greatly improved quarters, he immediately calls in seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and the last state of that man is worse than the first. Now notice Jesus' application of that parable: "Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation." The world is busy trying to [illegible] and obliterate his [illegible] and seems to succeed for [illegible] in holding high carnival [illegible] for the purpose of [illegible] and burning [illegible] hoofprints of the Devil [illegible] the world to-day. Will Satan cast out Satan? A house divided against itself cannot stand. The world is fighting Satan, and all the while he is in the midst of its councils, and bringing to naught their plans and desperate endeavors. And up to the coming of Christ into the world Satan had never suffered a final defeat or lost a decisive battle. It was victory with him all the way through the sad and dark pages of the world's history. No individual, no family, no nation had succeeding in routing him or destroying his power. All through the long centuries in which God was working out His eternal purposes and preparing for the coming of the Christ Satan seemed to have his own way. He led into sin every son of the Adamic race; he saw God's chosen people scattered and destroyed; he thought he was winning in the great contest against the Almighty God of the universe, for he failed to see the thread of faith from the broken and sinful lives of those who believed in God running back to Heaven down which was drawn the Deliverer in fulfillment of the promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. Satan's vision could not penetrate the inner council chambers of Heaven; he could not know how the Lord was preparing to mightily deliver the Devil-ridden world.

Our Deliverer.—The song of the angels that announced the birth of a Saviour at Bethlehem brought a joyful message to a sin-cursed earth, but it struck terror to the heart of Satan. God had been teaching man through the centuries the long and painful lesson that he was a failure and unable in his own strength to win a victory over Satan, or by his own righteousness to attain Heaven. And while He was revealing to man his sinfulness and his need, Satan was coming to believe in his hellish pride that he was always to be the victor. But when God sent His Son as the mighty Deliverer of the human race, then was enacted the gigantic battle of the ages and Satan met his first defeat and his power was broken forever.

"Then was Christ led of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the Devil." He must of necessity meet the arch enemy of God and defeat him in terrific battle. The picture which Bunyan draws of Christian's meeting with Apollyon gives in a graphic and realistic way something of what that contest between Christ and Satan in the wilderness must have been, and the victory won there made the triumph of Bunyan's Christian possible. It is the only way of victory. Satan fears no foe but Christ, from whose presence he fled in the wilderness after his repeated and complete temptations. "There is none other name under Heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved," because the name of Jesus is the only sound which can put Satan to rout and bring deliverance to the sin-stained and tempted heart.

If the man with the unclean spirit had let Jesus do his housecleaning and take up His dwelling place in the heart after it had been swept and garnished, the company of devils would never have dared come back again seeking to take up their abode there. The world will have to turn to Christ if it ever gets rid of the Devil and his angels. There is no cure for the ills of the sin-cursed, weary old world but the blood of Jesus Christ, which can wipe out all marks of the cloven hoof and banish its owner to the bottomless pit.

Hedged About.—With all of Satan's angsfroid in the presence of God he was ill at ease. There was a fly in his ointment. As he had journeyed to and fro through the earth he met that perfect and upright man Job, who eschewed evil and would have nothing to do with the Devil, and it troubled him to see that he was not able to exercise dominion over him. Job was prosperous and happy, and the Devil could not come at him because the protecting arm of God was thrown around him. Satan charges that Job is serving God because He blessed and protected him. "Hast not thou made an hedge about him?" he petulantly asks. Yes, God had, and thanks be to His blessed name, He does so to this day to those who love and serve Him. The Devil can't get near us while we stay with God, except as the Lord lets him in order to try us, for "the trying of your faith worketh patience, but let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." "Whom the Lord loveth, He chasteneth," and He makes Satan furnish the elbow grease.

Satan begged the privilege of testing Job. He thought he could make him curse and turn from God. He afflicted Job until all the dross in his nature was burned out. At first Job sees only himself and his sufferings and misfortunes, but he never doubts God, and at last out of the mist and darkness of his afflictions he catches a glimpse of the Lord's face, and exclaims: "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." It was worth all that Job endured to see God's face and to behold His righteousness that made him abhor any inherent goodness in himself. God makes the wrath of the Devil to praise Him even unto this day, and when in [illegible] the Devil spent one [illegible] for the purpose [illegible] and burning [illegible] Lord's hoof-

SICK OF HENDERSON.

Iowa Editor Says the Speaker Would Have Been Beaten.

Says Opposition Includes the Very Flower of Republican Party in His District—Predicts Victory for Boies.

A special telegram to the Chicago Chronicle from Waverly, Ia., under date of September 17, says that C. W. Miller, editor of the Democrat of that place, who was chairman of the democratic congressional convention which nominated Horace Boies, is of the opinion that if Speaker Henderson had remained in the field he would have been beaten at the polls.

"It is true that Mr. Henderson received a plurality of more than 11,000 two years ago," said ——ller, "but no one familiar with past conditions here will accept that as an index of his strength at the present time nor as an indication of the relative strength of the two great parties either then or now.

"In 1900 the democrats, disgruntled and divided, perhaps more than any other district of the state, really permitted the election to go by default, while the Henderson forces put forth as much energy as if their candidate was in actual danger of defeat—a rule that they have worked by, it may be said in passing, ever since Mr. Henderson first became the republican candidate in this district 18 years ago.

Defection in Cummins' Election.

"The result last year, when Gov. Cummins received less than 6,000 majority, would better serve to indicate the republican majority in the district, but even these figures are too high. Gov. Cummins, it should be remembered, was the idol of his own party and had hosts of democratic admirers besides, while his opponent, Phillips, was an obscure man and haphazard nominee, whose whole campaign consisted of a demonstration of his unfitness for the position to which he feebly aspired. Add to this the fact that the democratic state convention had broken up in disorder without even having adopted a declaration of principles, save to emphasize the 16 to 1 idea, which was never popular in this district, and it may readily be seen that the democrats were in the lowest depths of despair and discontent.

"It is safe to assume that over a thousand ordinarily stanch democrats voted for Cummins, while as many more refrained from voting at all. Make the deductions from the republican majority obtained in these facts and you have but about 3,000 as the majority that Former Gov. Boies will have to overcome to achieve success. Is the grand old man equal to this undertaking? I say yes, most emphatically.

Voters Sick of Henderson.

"In the first place, the rank and file of his own party were and are heartily sick of Henderson. They have had Henderson for breakfast and dinner and supper, year in and year out, till they feel like the participants in a quail-eating contest. This feeling of nausea has been growing for some years and has now assumed an acute form. In a word, there is revolt, and though more aggravated in some places than others no part of his district is free from it.

"The opposition to Mr. Henderson in his own party is not lacking in effective leadership. It consists of the very flower of the republican party in this district. Mr. Henderson gave ample acknowledgment of this fact when he ordered the 'snap' convention at which his last nomination was made, which was called four months in advance of the ordinary time of holding such conventions in this district. This unseemly haste was to head off Senator Courtright, the suggestion of whose candidacy hadmet with the heartiest approval everywhere.

Unable on Great Issues.

"Nor are these republican opponents of Col. Henderson lacking in effective arguments to prove that he never has represented and does not now properly represent the people of his district. They can show by his record that he has been unstable on all great questions of national import; that he was first for free silver and then against it; that he was first against Cuba libre and then for it; that he was first against the retention of the Philippines and then for it.

"It must not be inferred, of course, that these and other shifts have been made to meet the changing sentiment in his district. Quite the contrary. He has flopped around without regard to what may have been the opinion of his constituents, having supreme confidence that they would get into the band wagon and hurrah regardless of the direction in which he proposed to guide it.

"Incomprehensible as it may seem, the blind allegiance he demanded of his supporters has heretofore been given almost without protest, but there is a limit to the gullibility even of an Iowa republican, and this limit was apparently reached when Mr. Henderson began to berate and sneer at those republicans who were simple enough to assume that the anti-trust plank and antitrust plank that the astute Mr. Cummins slipped into the republican platform at Cedar Rapids last year meant what it said.

Call Him Tariff Trust Tool.

"That afforded his enemies the opening they had long been looking for, and they were not slow to take advantage of it. They stand upon the platform, they say, he does not. Therefore they oppose him consistently and without the sacrifice of party principle on their part. Moreover, they are making out a damaging case against him by claiming that his opposition to the platform is a confession that he is a tool of the tariff protected trusts, through whose favor he was elected.

"Another thing Mr. Henderson had to contend with is a horde of disappointed office seekers. The offices of the district seem generally to have gone to the wrong men. Time was when Mr. Henderson, like the hero of a song that did service on the vaudeville stage last year, could turn down an office seeker 'so politely' that the sting of defeat was easily allayed, but of late he has lost this knack entirely. As a consequence, the disappointed ones, generally men of influence and standing in their respective communities, are all 'knocking' instead of holding the Henderson bag as they have done in times past.

"Still another thing that worried Mr. Henderson is the prohibitionists, who have an active and brilliant candidate in the field in the person of Rev. Mr. Earl, of Waterloo.

Boies Strong in the Race.

"Mr. Boies is still Iowa's foremost statesman—earnest, honest, fearless and fair; without guile, without conceit and without ambition, save to serve his party and his country in the way that his judgment and conscience may direct. With such conditions as I have described Mr. Boies' success is not a remote possibility. It is a strong probability; indeed, almost an assumed fact."

The most probable explanation of Mr. Henderson's withdrawal is that he feared that he would be beaten in the coming election. He must have known the state of feeling among his constituents, and he would hardly have yielded to the opposing forces in his own party if he had believed that he could be elected in spite of them. At all events, his withdrawal is the most striking demonstration possible of the [illegible] of the tariff reform sentiment [illegible] the republicans of the middle

YOUTHS' DEPARTMENT

THE WEDDING.

What's all this stir in among the toys?
The rustle and stir? The donkey creaks,
The paper rustles, the little bell rolls,
The round drum rumbles, the rabbit squeaks.

There's not a toy but means to see,
In all the closet, from wall to wall,
The wedding between the Jack-in-the-box
And the prettiest china doll of all.

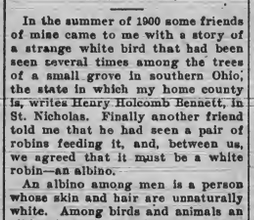
She looked so timid, and he so proud,
And both were as happy as they could be;
And the moon shone in through the closet door—
It was really a beautiful sight to see.

But when it was over, and all the toys
Had settled again upon the shelves,
Where Jack and the dolly could not hear,
They talked about it among themselves.

The little boy doll who came from France
Sighed as he shook his flaxen head:
"'Twould have been all right for a wooden doll,
But she might have done much better," he said.

Said Mrs. Noah: "I really think
'Twas a very stupid and slow affair;
I hope we shall find when we reach the ark
The animals all in order there."

But Jack-in-the-box and the little doll
Smiled at each other tenderly;
They did not hear, and they did not care,
But both were as happy as they could be.
—Katherine Pyle, in St. Nicholas.



THE ALBINO ROBIN.

Bird Was Entirely White, with Pink Eyes, But Too Weak to Take Care of Itself.

In the summer of 1900 some friends of mine came to me with a story of a strange white bird that had been seen several times among the trees of a small grove in southern Ohio, the state in which my home county is, writes Henry Holcomb Bennett, in St. Nicholas. Finally another friend told me that he had seen a pair of robins feeding it, and, between us, we agreed that it must be a white robin—an albino.

An albino among men is a person whose skin and hair are unnaturally white. Among birds and animals an albino is one which is white, differing from others of its species. A bird or animal the normal color of which is white, or which changes to white feathers or fur for winter, is not an albino. The perfect albino has pink eyes, and no color about it. The white robin I saw was a perfect albino.

The rest of the brood, of which the albino was one, had scattered and were looking out for themselves; but the parent birds were still feeding their white fledgling. The other birds in the grove took a great deal of interest in the strange inhabitant, especially the purple grackles. As the white robin sat on a bough the grackles would perch near it, looking at it with their heads turned, shrewdly to one side, or hopping from place to place, as though to get a better view. All the time they kept up a blackbird conversation about the object of their curiosity, clucking and chuckling away at a great rate.

THE WHITE ROBIN.

The white robin did not hunt food for itself, although it was fully old enough to do so. But depended on its parents. When it flew, it did so awkwardly and blunderingly, and generally seemed to prefer staying in one place.

A day or two afterward two boys brought to my office the white robin, dead. One of the local papers had said that an albino robin might be sold to a museum, and I accused the boys of having killed the bird on the chance of selling it. This they stoutly denied, saying that they found it dead. I took off the skin for the purpose of mounting it, and found that the boys had been telling the truth, for there was no sign of an injury. The poor robin was very thin, and its stomach was almost empty, except for the remains of one bug. I wondered if its parents had grown tired of feeding it. I found, also, that the reason it flew so poorly was because its eyes were defective, and that it must have been almost blind. Had its parents fed it until the time of the fall migration southward, the white robin could not have gone with the rest, and must have starved. The robin was entirely white, with pink eyes, a pinky-white beak and pinkish legs.

Albinism, by the way, is caused by the lack of pigment, or coloring matter, in the quills. Birds so afflicted are, usually, not well developed, and suffer from attacks of individuals of their own species.

Peculiar Gypsy Custom.

The gypsies employ a very simple method to check that member of their band of musicians who has to make the collection. They give him a plate to hold in his right hand, and a live fly, which he has to keep imprisoned in his left as he goes collecting the money.

DISAPPEARING COIN.

A Parlor Trick for Boys and Girls Which Is a Never-Failing Source of Fun.

The performer takes a large coin, marks it before the eyes of the audience, covers it with a handkerchief, and asks somebody to hold coin and handkerchief over a glass filled with water (Fig. 1). Stepping back a few paces, he asks the person holding glass and coin to let the coin drop into the glass. Then he removes the handkerchief and—the coin cannot be found in the glass. The performer claims that the coin must be in somebody's pocket, etc., and stepping up to some one pulls it out of its hiding place and shows it to the audience.

DISAPPEARING COIN TRICK.

2 and 3a), and a piece of thin rubber band, on one of which a hook made of a pin is fastened, while on the other one a small piece of wax is stuck. The rubber band is fastened by the hook to the lining of the sleeve. After the coin has been returned to the performer—having been marked and given to the audience for inspection—the wax is pressed to the coin so that it will disappear under the cuff as soon as the rubber band is let go. Instead of the coin, the piece of glass the size of the coin is covered with the handkerchief and given to one of the audience, together with the glass filled with water. When the order to drop the coin in the water is given, the piece of glass (being transparent) will not be seen in the water, and the coin will have disappeared.

To find the coin in somebody's pocket is easy. The performer pulls it out of the cuff while everybody is looking at the glass of water, pulls it from the wax with the index finger, and is now ready to make it appear wherever he wishes.—Chicago Tribune.

SUBDUING AN ELEPHANT.

Keeper Gave Him a Violent Beating and the Animal Never Forgot the Lesson.

There are probably not many people who know why elephants are so easily controlled by their keepers.

It is true that an elephant never forgets or forgives an injury, and that is the very basis from which all trainers derive their power.

Some years ago there was a very unruly elephant belonging to a certain circus. The man who had been his keeper was getting old and wanted to give up his position, so another man was found who was willing to take his place. The transfer of keepers was made in a small town in Indiana. Early one morning the elephant was led into an open space outside the tent, and was then chained very securely. His new keeper took a position near by where he could be seen constantly by the elephant's cruel little eyes. By a little teasing he succeeded in annoying the animal until he struck viciously at him with his trunk, which was exactly what the new keeper wanted. At that instant he and some circus men who had been waiting out of sight behind the elephant began to beat him and prod his tough hide with elephant hooks. He shrieked with pain and rage and tried to reach the new keeper, who was the only man his chains permitted him to see. But at each attack the elephant tried to make the blows descended harder and harder, and finally he ceased, convinced at last.

After he had stopped trying to fight and had become quite conquered, his new keeper advanced boldly, loosened his chains, and triumphantly led him back to the circus tent. He never forgot the beating, and he never risked getting another by being ugly to his keeper.—N. Y. Herald.

A ROAD TO FAILURE.

Doing One Thing and Thinking of Another Has Never Yet Worked Successfully.

"I don't like Cousin Fanny," said a little girl, with the outspoken frankness of "seven times one," and on being questioned, she thus explained her prejudice. "When she tells me fairy stories, she always acts as if she were thinking of something else."

Those of us who do not have the pleasure of Cousin Fanny's acquaintance know her kind. There are some people who never seem able to give more than a partial attention to those with whom they are conversing. They come back to the subject under discussion with a start, as if they had just been wakened from a comfortable nap.

Doing one thing and thinking of another is a sufficient explanation of the failure of so many. "Be all there" when you are working, and so earn the right to throw yourself into your recreation. No one gets less satisfaction out of life than the person who never can spare more than a fraction of his attention to the matter in hand.—Wellspring.

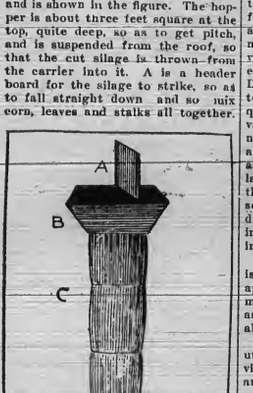
Agricultural Hints.

TWO EXCELLENT CROPS.

Sweet Corn and Fodder as Well as Sorghum Relished by Hogs and Milk Cows.

There are two crops that can be grown by the farmer in almost any part of the corn and hog belt that are especially adapted for hogs and cows. One of these is sweet corn, and the other is sorghum. The former can be cultivated about as cheaply as field corn, but will mature much earlier and comes in at a time when the grain is scarcest, and most needed. It is an ideal feed for young stuff, especially for pigs. It gives them a start when they are in good condition for fattening later on.

I wish to impress upon your readers the advantages of sorghum. It is a plant of vigorous growth and stands drought remarkably well. It is a heavy yielder. It will make as much succulent food per acre as any feed that can be produced. In planting this crop do not get it too thick for hogs, as the larger the stalk the more sap and the more seed it will produce. I found out by experience that hogs do not care for small stalks, though they are better for cattle. I will plant three feet six inches by three feet and not too much in a hill, so as to get as large a growth as possible to the stalk and seed. Although last season was a very dry one, I got from four to five tons per acre.



To the beginner I would say start with an acre, and see how much feed of that kind you will need. For an ordinary farmer with ten brood sows, some growing shotes, an acre will be enough and you will have some besides for cattle. Five pounds of seed will be required to plant an acre. Sorghum gives the hogs a thrifty and growthy look and condition. Their hair is as smooth as if they had been groomed.

I also feed the crop cured. To cure the crop I had a large shed 60 feet in length, in which I hauled and leaned up around the walls till it was cured and then stored in one end. The enemy of the seed is mice, chickens and English sparrows. If you can keep them off, you are all right. There is no waste in sorghum fodder, as the horses and cattle will eat every vestige of it and you can't tell where you fed them last. Cows will leave good corn fodder to eat sorghum.—C. D. Work, in Nebraska Farmer.

TO DISTRIBUTE SILAGE.

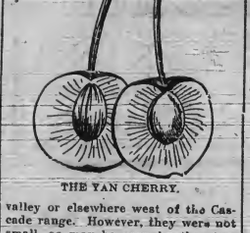
The Hopper and Bag Plan Here Described Is the Best That Has Yet Been Discovered.

Many forms of distributors have been invented, but what is known as the "hopper and bag" plan is far superior to any yet chanced upon, and is shown in the figure. The hopper is about three feet square at the top, quite deep, so as to get pitch, and is suspended from the roof, so that the cut silage is thrown from the carrier into it. A is a header board for the silage to strike, so as to fall straight down and so mix corn, leaves and stalks all together.

SILAGE DISTRIBUTOR.

B is the hopper and C is a tube made by cutting through the ends of old gunny or fertilizer sacks and making a tube or hose of them and suspend it under the hopper. A cord is attached, and as the silage comes down the tube it is "led" about, and the silage thoroughly mixed and put exactly where wanted, without lifting or throwing a pound. Some substitute old joints of stovepipe for the bags, and in either case as the silage comes up to the tube a section or two is taken off and the filling proceeds.—Cor. Ohio Farmer.

Hand Separators Multiplying.



The number of hand separators on farms is increasing both in this country and in Europe. There is a constant conflict of opinion between those in favor of the hand separator and those in favor of milk delivered whole to the central creamery. Each method has an advantage. With men owning but few cows the hand separator will never be popular, as it represents a considerable investment and requires skilled care. The man that has a goodly number of cows finds the separator a good investment. So we may expect to see the two systems exist side by side. The hand separator is certainly preferable from a sanitary standpoint, except where the large creamery sterilized all skim milk.

The turf formed by a pasture land of native grasses makes an ideal grass run for all kinds of poultry, old and young.

PROMISING NEW CHERRY.

It Is Called the Yan and Is Considered Well Worthy of General Trial.

Among the many varieties of the sweet cherries originated by that devoted experimenter with fruits in Oregon, Seth Lewelling, the Yan is one of the latest and best yet introduced to the public. It was from the same source that the Bing came, which is now quite well distributed and in fast winning its way into popular favor. Both varieties were named for faithful Chinese laborers working for Mr. Lewelling. He considered the Yan one of the best seedlings that ever he grew. The accompanying drawing was made from specimens that were grown and recently sent to me by George Ruedy, of Colfax, Ore. As this place is in the Palouse country, where the rainfall is very much less than in the western part of the state, especially during the growing season, these specimens are considerably smaller than they would have been if they had been grown in the Willamette valley or elsewhere west of the Cascade range. However, they were not small, as may be seen by the two sectional views that show the edge and side of the seed. In size the Yan may be called a large cherry; the shape is decidedly conical and each fruit has a distinct suture on one side only. Its color is dark, purplish red outside, flesh being streaked and flecked with light red, and it is very firm. No cherry that I know is better able to endure long shipment than this seems to be. The flavor is very mild subacid, but not so much so as properly to be called sweet. To my taste it is excellent, having a very distinct cherry flavor. The stone is none too large for so large a cherry. Mr. Ruedy says it is very prolific, and when compared with many other choice kinds of the same class, both old and new, he considers it well worthy of general trial.—H. E. Van Deman, in Rural New Yorker.

TO MAKE GOOD CIDER.

Use Only Ripe Apples of Prime Quality If You Want to Produce a Fine Article.

Cider of the best quality suitable to use for drinking should be made from apples ripe enough, rich enough and of sufficiently good quality to make a palatable product. Such varieties as Whitneys No. 20 make an excellent cider. Varieties like Duchess of Oldenburg are too acid to make cider of fine flavor and good quality. The undersized fruit of varieties like Winesap and Jenet make cider of excellent quality, suitable for table use. They have the additional advantage of ripening later in the fall. Cider made late in the fall can be kept sweet or nearly so and in suitable condition for drinking longer than that made during the heat of the summer or during the earlier fall months.

Cider intended simply for vinegar is usually made from the refuse of apples, that is, those too small for market or which have been bruised as windfalls and are not merchantable.

If the farmer's object is simply to utilize the waste fruit and get it into vinegar he will purchase a grinder and press suitable to the amount of work to be done.

Under the old-fashioned method of making vinegar, cider generally stood in barrels for two years before it was in condition for use. This old-time process is very slow and not commercially profitable, since the market is flooded with vinegar made from corn at a very much lower price than the farmer can afford to make vinegar from apples.

With ordinary processes each bushel of apples should make two gallons or more of cider. Should it be the thought of the maker to produce clear, fine cider suitable for drinking, care should be taken in the selection of fruit. The better quality of the fruit the more refreshing the juice and drink.

While yet sweet the cider should be heated and skimmed for the space of two hours at a temperature of 165 degrees. The cider thus pasteurized may be stored in Mason fruit jars, bottles or kegs and kept sweet indefinitely.—E. F. Stephens, in Farmers' Voice.

The Pullin of Weeds.

When we pull weeds at a time when nearly ripe they evince a certain degree of care and solicitude for their precious seeds that is noticeable and rather touching. I have seen them curl their leaves around or upward almost as far as possible, to seemingly cover those seeds from the intense heat of the sun. I have often found weeds wilted, quite dead, sun-killed, whose leaves were yet all wrapped about the seed-pods protectingly. And all this is found, if only observed, in those despicable and ignominous old weeds.—F. L. Risley, Epitomia.

ROOSEVELT'S VERSATILITY.

"Brilliant, Erratic and Curious Sort of a Man" and Other Negative Opinions.

When Gov. Roosevelt in 1900, broke his explicit pledge to numerous politicians that he would not, under any circumstances, be a candidate for the vice presidency, and accepted the nomination he incurred the ill will of many politicians who had taken him at his word and had planned accordingly. Amongst these was Congressman Grosvenor, of Ohio, who during convention week, was the special correspondent of the New York Journal.

In a letter dated June 17, 1900, published in the Journal of June 18, he said of Roosevelt:

"If he is nominated it will very soon be understood that the game has been one in which he himself has participated, either as an organizer, or as consenting to the performance.

"Nobody who honors Roosevelt takes any stock in this sort of thing. It is not believed that he will consent to lend himself to the injury of men who, relying upon his early statement that under no consideration would he be a candidate, have honestly and faithfully made their own campaign for the nomination."

The Journal of June 19, 1900, contains another letter from Mr. Grosvenor, in which he said:

"The demand of Mr. Platt and the Quay-Platt combination is that McKinley shall be forced to take a distasteful running mate of their selection."

Again in the Journal of June 21, Mr. Grosvenor said:

"There is something new here under the sun. We have a brilliant, erratic and curious sort of man. His enemies are trying to destroy him, and a great horde of selfish, cold-blooded politicians are trying to use him for their own selfish ends. That man is Theodore Roosevelt."

They (the men back of Roosevelt) are willing to push him off and dump him on the presidential ticket in the sole and sordid interest of themselves and their own schemes in politics."

As to Roosevelt himself, he added:

"It will be said of him, either that he is a dishonest man or else that he did not want the place . . . that he was simply taken possession of by the men who hated him, and forced into a position in order that they might get rid of him."

The "game" of politics is still in play, and now we find Congressman Grosvenor as the right-bower of the president, who is this same "brilliant, erratic, and curious" Roosevelt. Verily, "politics make strange bed-fellows."

PUBLICITY FOR THE TRUSTS.

They Are Willing to Accept Anything That Will Hoodwink the People.

The New York Commercial, which is a staunch republican and protectionist journal, assures us, in the issue of September 9, 1902, that:

"Notwithstanding reports to the contrary, corporation lawyers and representatives of the big combines are not all offended by the attitude of President Roosevelt toward the industrial combinations. They claim that so far as they know no steps have been taken nor will be taken in the matter of influencing the president to desist from forcing the issue to the front. They argue that the president in advocating publicity in its connection with combinations, is voicing the sentiments of organizers as well as owners of combinations that have been created on legitimate lines. Said a corporation attorney:

"'Publicity is what we desire!'"

Certainly the trusts desire anything that will throw dust in the eyes of the people, so that they cannot clearly see the tariff and other special privileges that foster and protect the trusts and enable them to fleece the public. The assurance of the Commercial that the trusts are not offended by the attitude of the president was not necessary. He never, by any chance, mentions the tariff in connection with trusts, and is very particular in many other respects not to offend them. If he can, by refusing to discuss the tariff, postpone the evil days for trusts, he will be their best friend. He is doing his part nobly. Will they show their appreciation in 1904? Of course!

——In free trade England the industrial combinations called trusts afford little cause of complaint, for the moment any of them should undertake to raise prices above the normal level foreign competition would flow in to redress the balance in favor of the British consumers. In the United States, on the other hand, the tariff enables the trusts to plunder consumers by warding off competition.—Philadelphia Record.

ROOSEVELT'S TRUST POLICY.

The Chief Executive Evidently Lacks the Courage to Openly Face the Issue.

The New York Times thus sums up President Roosevelt's indefinite, incoherent programme for the remedy of the trust evil:

"The president talks with great zeal and earnestness about remedying evils, which he does not define, by an amendment which he does not clearly express, to the constitution, which can be amended only with the greatest difficulty at any time, and not all at a time when, as now, the people have no notion even of what amendment is feasible, or what it could do if adopted."

It will be recalled that in the last congress half a dozen bills were presented by democratic members of the house and senate, and an important bill by a republican member—the Babcock bill—to meet the trust evil. Even the president's appeal for a publicity bill was taken account of by these bills. But what came of this rush of legislation, by the republican majority in congress, or through President Roosevelt's intervention? Every scrap or scrimpage of it was sidetracked; it was not even allowed consideration; all test votes were dexterously avoided. The Babcock bill, breaking up the partnership between the trusts and the Dingley tariff, was suppressed. President Roosevelt was unquestionably a party to this policy of avoidance and evasion. He uttered no word advising action on, or even the consideration of, these anti-trust bills. They were suppressed with his approval.

WELL—WHY DON'T YOU PROTECT HIM?

"We renew our faith in the policy of protection to American labor."—Republican Platform, 1900.

Abandoning all attempts at legislation, demonstratively in the power of congress, the president has started out on his stumping tour with a great hullabaloo for a constitutional amendment.

The president's policy, to which he is devoting his stumping swing of the political circle, is clearly one of evasion and delay. He lacks the courage to face the issue. He dodges all expression on the anti-trust bills before congress, and then declares nothing can be done but by the impossible remedy of a constitutional amendment. This will throw the question over until after the next presidential election, leaving the president his opportunities to humbug both the trust and anti-trust people. His party want the votes of one section and the money and power of the other.

DRIFT OF OPINION.

——The president has slain a wild boar, but he doesn't appear to be able to do anything to the trust hog.—Atlanta Constitution.

——Mr. Roosevelt has repeatedly said of late that he firmly believed an amendment to the constitution of the United States would be necessary in the end, in order to curb the trusts. Mr. Lodge, on the other hand, deprecates talk of a constitutional amendment. When such intimate friends disagree ever so little, what can be expected from a whole party?—Springfield Republican.

——Many are they in republican circles who see in our president's "Good Lord—good devil"—shufflings about monopolies "another good man gone wrong," and on whose brow they will write, as another generation branded on the brow of Daniel Webster, Ichabod. Poll-loal trees, like others, must be judged of by their fruits. So judged, the republican party, by the acts and words of President Roosevelt and the majority in congress, are symbolized by the barren fig tree which our Lord cursed.—Portland (Me.) Argus.

——President Roosevelt is evidently at the beginning, instead of at the end, of his troubles on the tariff question. Already the American Economist, the organ of the American Protective Tariff league, which is composed of manufacturers representing every state in the union, is talking very plainly to the president, saying, among other far from pleasant things, that he has been misled by certain friends, and complimenting the republicans who defeated his Cuban reciprocity [illegible]. Upon no live, pertinent issue [illegible] present time are democrats in [illegible] in sentiment as [illegible] upon the pra[illegible] out of the [illegible]

CONQUERS PAIN.

A HARD STRUGGLE.

When you have a bad back, a back that's lame, weak or aching it's a hard struggle sometimes to find relief and cure, but it's a harder struggle when the dangers beset you of urinary disorders, too frequent urination, retention of the urine with all the subsequent pains, annoyances and sufferings. There are many medicines that relieve these conditions, but you want a remedy—a cure. Read this statement; it tells of a cure that lasted.

Veteran Josiah Heller, place of residence 706 South Walnut St., Urbana, Ill., says: "In the fall of 1889 I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Cunningham's drug store in Champaign and after taking the remedy conscientiously I made a public statement of the results. I told how Doan's Kidney Pills relieved me of kidney trouble, disposed of my lame back and the pains across my loins beneath the shoulder blades, etc. During the interval which has elapsed I have had occasion at times to resort to Doan's Kidney Pills when I noticed warnings of another attack and on each and every occasion the result obtained was just as satisfactory as when the Pills were first brought to my notice. At this time I just as emphatically endorse the preparations as I did several years ago.

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mr. Heller will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists, price 50 cents per box.

BLACK-DRAUGHT
THE ORIGINAL LIVER MEDICINE

A sallow complexion, dizziness, biliousness and a coated tongue are common indications of liver and kidney diseases. Stomach and bowel troubles, severe as they are, give immediate warning by pain, but liver and kidney troubles, though less painful at the start, are much harder to cure. Thedford's Black-Draught never fails to benefit diseased liver and weakened kidneys. It stirs up the torpid liver to throw off the germs of fever and ague. It is a certain preventive of cholera and Bright's disease of the kidneys. With kidneys reinforced by Thedford's Black-Draught thousands of persons have dwelt immune in the midst of yellow fever. Many families live in perfect health and have no other doctor than Thedford's Black-Draught. It is always on hand for use in an emergency and saves many expensive calls of a doctor.

Nelms, S. C., March 10, 1901.
I have used Thedford's Black-Draught for three years and have not had to go to a doctor since I have been taking it. It is the best medicine for me that is on the market for liver and kidney troubles and dyspepsia and other troubles.
Rev. A. C. LEWIS.

FORTS DESTROYED.

Capt. Pershing's Expedition Against the Moros Successful.

Manila, Oct. 2.—The Macia Moros in Mindanao have offered but slight resistance to the column under Capt. Pershing, of the 15th infantry.

After a series of skirmishes on Monday and Tuesday of this week the Moros retreated into six forts on the shores of the lake. When a courier left Maciu Tuesday for Camp Vicars, Capt. Pershing was preparing to assault the last Moro strongohld.

The American column reached the former camp at Maciu Sunday night. On Monday the Moros opened fire on them with a brass cannon and rifles from a series of new forts which had been erected since Capt. Pershing's first visit to the place. The battery under Capt. William S. McNair scaled a ridge commanding the position of the Moros and shelled them out. The engineers under Capt. Jay J. Morrow had constructed a trail over the swamp flanking the Moro position. The men of Capt. Pershing's column crossed the swamp by the trail and captured and destroyed three of the Moro forts. The Moros stood but a short while and ran as soon as the artillery opened on them.

Capt. Pershing has been ordered to destroy the forts unless the Moros make peace. Twenty Moros were killed and many were wounded. There were no casualties among the Americans.

Washington, Oct. 2.—The war department officials are watching with great interest the operations of Capt. Pershing against the Maciu Moros, who are located near the southeast end of Lake Lanao on the island of Mindanao. The datto at Maciu has proved to be one of the most powerful and stubborn in his resistance to the United States. He has perhaps three or four thousand followers. It was the Maciu Moros who last spring killed a number of American soldiers and captured stock belonging to them. An unsuccessful effort was made to get them to surrender the murderers and give up the stock that had been taken but their datto was obdurate and the war department determined on the campaign which Capt. Pershing apparently has gone far towards bringing to a successful conclusion. The opinion of the war department officials is that the defeat of Maciu Moros will have a salutary effect throughout the islands. Many of the natives heretofore have expressed their desire for friendly relations with the United States.

AT THE NORTH POLE.

Explorer Baldwin Believes tt is Surrounded With Ice.

Cinematograph Pictures of Ice Scenes Were Taken—Balloons With Messages Sent Adrift But Never Reached Destination.

New York, Oct. 3.—Evelyn B. Baldwin, the Arctic explorer, arrived Thursday on the steamship Germanic, of the White Star line.

Mr. Baldwin at first refused to talk about the alleged controversies which had taken place between him and Capt. Johannsen, of the America, but after hearing that it had been reported that the expedition had been short of food and supplies he made the following statement:

"There is not a word of truth in the report of our not having sufficient supplies. It is easy to explain the trouble between myself and Capt. Johannsen. He wanted to be the whole thing. That's all.

"The expedition [illegible] with 42 persons on board and we brought back the same number. The Fram drifted around in the ice for four years, while in one year we did almost as much and established an outpost. We have learned one good lesson, though, never take a Swede and a Norwegian together along with you if you want to avoid trouble. The ice pilot was a Norwegian and the sailing master a Swede. There's the whole thing in a nutshell.

"We had quite a pleasant time of it, taken altogether. Some of the men took musical instruments along with them and they cheered us up a bit. Another feature was the cinematograph pictures that we took of various ice scenes. We also took hundreds of photographs. Our most exciting adventure was when we were coming back and were caught in the pack ice. This was really very serious, and the ship's propeller frame was broken and the rudder and screw bent. Two members of the party were set on by white bears one day and had a narrow escape.

"We were sending balloons and buoys adrift containing messages continually. Altogether we sent over 300 messages. Fifteen balloons were sent up, but they never reached their destinations. The meteorological observations taken and the dredging will be of great interest to science. We manufactured our own hydrogen gas for the balloons without accident, which is another thing I think we deserve credit for. The knowledge gained of air and ocean currents will also be of great value to science.

"I still believe that when the pole is reached it will be found to be surrounded by ice.

"The fate of Andree? I think he went down into the sea."

The explorer said he had come directly from Tromsoe, Norway, at the direction of Mr. Ziegler, who dispatched the expedition.

GRAVE ROBBERS.

Gangs of Ghouls Infest Indianapolis and Vicinity.

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 2.—Startling developments are promised in the grave robbery sensation within the next 24 hours. Disclosures are predicted for Thursday which will show that Rufus Cantrell and his gang, now in custody, are not the only ghouls that have been robbing graves in and around Indianapolis to supply the medical colleges of this city and other colleges in the west.

Cantrell acknowledges that other gangs of grave robbers make Indianapolis their headquarters and that already robberies have been discovered which were committed by these other parties.

Other than this, he refuses to talk about the fellow-members of his "profession" here in the city, and will not give the detectives the least clew which will lead to any further arrests.

Two white men and one Negro make Indianapolis their headquarters and confine their robbing to grave yards and cemeteries between this city and Marion. Hardly a city or town in the gas belt has escaped the depredations of these grave robbers. This is an admission of Cantrell and he says that local colleges have procured a number of bodies from these parties, but he refuses to divulge their names. A second gang, headed by a man who formerly lived in Indianapolis, and had a contract for supplying bodies for several local colleges, operate between Indianapolis, Martinsville and Columbus. The majority of the bodies stolen by these ghouls are shipped to Louisville and sold to medical colleges in that city. A few, Cantrell says, are shipped to Cincinnati.

The entire police and detective forces are working on the case.

LINCOLN'S MOTHER.

The Nancy Hanks Lincoln Monument Dedication.

Lincoln City, Ind., Oct. 2.—A monument to Nancy Hanks Lincoln was dedicated here Wednesday, and notwithstanding the disagreeable weather, the largest crowd that ever gathered in the county witnessed the ceremonies. The grove in which the monument is located was cleaned of underbrush and a number of eating stands, one capable of seating a thousand people, were erected. One of the disappointing features of the exercises was the inability of J. S. Culver to be present. He is the contractor who furnished the stone for the Nancy Hanks monument, from the old base of the Abraham Lincoln monument at Springfield. He charged nothing for the stone, and his liberality made the Nancy Hanks monument a possibility. Gen. John C. Black, of Chicago, delivered the oration and Gov. Durbin accepted the monument.

THE BURIAL OF ZOLA.

The Remains Laid to Rest With Simple Ceremonies.

There Was No Disorders as Was Predicted—The Widow Bids Farewell to the Remains in the Mortuary Chamber.

Paris, Oct. 6.—The remains of Emile Zola were laid at rest Sunday with simple, but impressive, ceremonies. It was such a funeral as Zola himself would have wished, without pomp, but with serried ranks of thousands of thousands of workingmen, many accompanied by their wives, sorrowfully marching behind his coffin. Municipal guards, mounted and on foot, lined the route, but except for a company of infantry which rendered military honors to the body as it was carried from the house to the hearse they were there as guardians of order, and not as participants in the ceremony.

Former Capt. Dreyfus marched in the funeral cortege, according to the authority of prefect of police, but he passed completely unnoticed by the crowd.

The Temps Sunday said Dreyfus went to the Zola house Saturday evening and watched beside the corpse with the family. He induced Mme. Zola to give him back his promise not to attend the funeral, and he walked in the procession Sunday between La Lance, former protesting deputy from Alsace in the German reichstag, and M. Monod, member of the Institute.

Long before 1 o'clock Sunday afternoon, the hour fixed for the start of the cortege from the Zola residence in the Rue de Braxelies, an immense concourse began gathering along the short route leading to the entrance of the Mont Matre cemetery, from which the public was completely excluded from midday. The immediate vicinity of the house was surrounded by a cordon of police, through which but relatives and intimate friends of Zola were allowed to pass. Facing the house was drawn up a double line of infantry, commanded by a captain on horseback. The soldiers were there to render the military honor due to a deceased officer.

A handsome hearse, with sable plumes on the roof and on the heads of the two horses attached to it, stood before the door. The hearse was enveloped in black and silver housings. Preceding the hearse were three other cars almost hidden beneath masses of magnificent floral offerings from Zola's admirers in all parts of the world, including an immense wreath of giant chrysanthemums bearing the words, "From the Frenchmen of San Francisco."

Mme. Zola wished to follow her husband's body to the grave, but her doctors absolutely forbade her to do so. She, therefore, bade farewell to the remains in the mortuary chamber. Her grief was most poignant when the coffin was removed to the entrance hall of the house, where it rested a few minutes.

BOER SYMPATHIZERS.

New York, Oct. 6.—A committee of Boer sympathizers, including representatives of the Irish-American societies, welcomed Sunday Francis William Reitz, formerly secretary of state of the Orange Free State, who arrived with his wife on the Holland-American steamship Statendam from Boulogne Sur Mer.

"While not here to agitate for the reopening of the war," said Reitz, "I have in view the two-fold object of duty to my countrymen and remuneration to myself. The Boers have been tricked into forsaking their colonial allies by oral promises of Kitchener and Milner that they would endeavor to obtain at the time of the coronation amnesty for all rebels."

SHOWING THE WAY.

Most of our readers know all about the aches and pains of a bad back; very few people are free from sick kidneys, as the kidneys are the most overworked organs of the body and "go wrong" at times no matter how well the general health may be. The trouble is so few understand the indications of kidney trouble. You are nervous, tired out and weary, have stitches, twinges and twitches of backache pains, but lay it to other causes; finally the annoyance and suffering attendant with urinary disorders, retention of the urine, too frequent urination, makes you realize the seriousness of it. At any stage you should take a remedy that will not only relieve but cure you. Read the following and profit by the lesson it teaches:

C. J. McMurray, a resident of Freeport, Ill., address 47 Iroquois St., says: "I have greater faith in Doan's Kidney Pills to-day than I had in the fall of 1897 when I first took that remedy and it cured me of an acute pain across the back and imperfect action of the kidneys. Since I made a public statement of these facts and recommended Doan's Kidney Pills to [illegible] acquaintances, thoroughly believing as I did both from observation and experience that they would do just as they were represented to do. I am still pleased to reendorse my statement given to the public shortly after I first began to use the remedy."

A FREE TRIAL of this great Kidney medicine which cured Mr. McMurray, will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists, price 50 cents per box.

IT CAME TO NAUGHT.

Coal Conference at the White House Ended in a Failure.

The Presidents of the Railroads and Coal Companies Refused to Arbitrate and Denounced the Miners' Labor Organization.

Washington, Oct. 4.—The coal conference between the president and representatives of the operators and the miners came to an end at the temporary white house Friday afternoon with a failure to reach an agreement. Apparently the rock upon which the conference split was recognition of the miners' union.

The president had urged the contending parties to cease strife in the interests of the public welfare. The miners, through the president of their union, had expressed a willingness to submit differences to arbitration of a tribunal to be named by the president and to enter into an agreement to abide by terms fixed by the arbitrators for a period of from one to five years. The employers, through the presidents of the railroad and coal companies and a leading independent mine operator, had squarely refused arbitration, had denounced the miners' labor organization as a lawless and anarchistic body with which they could and would have no dealings; had demanded federal troops to ensure complete protection to workers and their families in the mining region, and court proceedings against the miners' union, and had offered, if the men returned to work, to submit grievances at individual collieries to the decision of the judges of the court of common pleas for the district of Pennsylvania, in which the colliery was located.

It was a remarkable chapter in the economic history of the country that was written Friday. For the first time the president of the republic had intervened directly between the great forces of capital and labor in an effort to avert what he himself regarded as a great national calamity. The result was to bring the principals in the great controversy face to face with the whole country eagerly intent and watchful of their doings. Technicality the issues between the two great forces stand as they did before the president summoned the representatives of the contending forces to the national capital, and forgetting his own acute suffering, besought them for love of the great country wherein they dwelt, and out of pity for the countless throng of suffering poor to adjust their differences and work together in peace for the common weal.

Friday the views of the contenders in the great industrial struggle were so extreme and wide apart that there was no middle ground possible and so the conference came to an end without any agreement for its continuation. The conference had lasted six hours, including a recess of three hours, between the morning and afternoon sessions taken to enable the miners and operators to prepare a written response to the president's appeal.

The president entered at once on the business in hand by reading a statement which he had carefully prepared urging a settlement of the strike in the interests of the public. His manner was exceedingly serious and his voice showed his deep feeling. Almost immediately after the president had closed Mr. Mitchell arose and on behalf of the miners offered to submit the differences to arbitration. The operators looked surprised, but before any reply could be made, President Roosevelt said he desired that both parties take the matter under consideration and meet him again at 3 o'clock. The first session of the conference had lasted less than 15 minutes. The operators were driven to their private cars in the railroad yards and Mr. Mitchell and his party returned to their hotel. Both parties immediately set to work to prepare statements in reply to the president's suggestions.

The operators made it plain that they would listen to no proposition whatever emanating from Mr. Mitchell. It was five minutes of 5 o'clock when the conference ended. The operators came down stairs and held a brief consultation and then left in their carriages for their train. Several of them declared the interference of the president had resulted in retarding rather than forwarding the settlement. They asserted that no progress had been made and said they would return to continue the contest. They declared the situation was most serious as to coal supply, but said that coal would be furnished to the public and that if given protection they could get men to mine coal to at least 70 per cent. of their capacity. They said there would be no compromise and that the strike would continue until the miners succumbed. They asserted their determination to make no concessions.

ANOTHER CONFERENCE.

President and Cabinet Again Considers the Coal Situation.

Washington, Oct. 6.—In an earnest effort to expedite the adjustment of the coal strike problem, another conference over the situation was held at the white house Sunday and adjourned after three hours of deliberations. No statement was given out as to the conclusions reached and every participant absolutely refused to discuss what had taken place during the meeting. The conference was called for in view of the importance to the American people of a speedy solution of the question. Only four of the members of the cabinet were present. This however, was significant only of the fact that three of these four were lawyers and that the issue involved was one which called for the deliberation of trained legal minds.

In this state of absolute reticence of the parties to the conference it is almost impossible to do more than draw the most general of conclusions as to the nature of the proceedings based upon what precoded the meeting. The known facts are that the president has reached the conclusion that he has nothing to expect save refusal from a further appeal to the coal operators and therefore has decided to look for relief from the situation to the miners side.

He feels that he hardly can expect them to make the sacrifice of all their contentions without holding out at least a promise of some return, and the question before him is as to his ability to do this. He can pledge himself to appeal to congress to examine into the justice of the miners' complaints and remedy them so far as lies in the power of the legislative branch. He is backed by the earnest good will of the executive. Also he can suggest to Gov. Stone of Pennsylvania, that he cause the Pennsylvania legislature likewise to make an inquiry perhaps hastening the usual methods by calling an extra session. But these pledges would he given only on condition that the men go at once into the mines and get out with all speed the coal for which the people are suffering. To adopt this course means the continuance of the policy of exerting moral suasion to end the strike.

WILL BURN WOOD.

Residents of Lincoln, N. J., Accept An Offer of Hardwood Timber.

Bound Brook, N. J., Oct. 6.—Mayor Drake, of Lincoln, N. J., and also president of a real estate company, Sunday offered free of charge to the residents of Lincoln three acres of standing hardwood timber owned by the company and located on the outskirts of the village. The only condition is that the timber must be cut down, cut into cordwood lengths and stacked. Then it will be distributed to the townspeople. The offer was at once accepted, almost every family providing at least one worker, and by afternoon the cutting of the trees began. There are 300 inhabitants in the village and it is figured that there is enough wood in the tract to do them for the winter, should it become necessary to keep up the consumption of it. The same company owns five acres of woodland in the Thirteenth ward of Trenton and another tract near Plainfield. Mr. Drake announced that the timber on these would be donated to the poor of the cities mentioned.

TO RELIEVE A COAL FAMINE.

Offer of Coal Lands Made to President Roosevelt.

New York, Oct. 6.—Another offer of coal lands has been made to President Roosevelt to relieve a possible coal famine. Mrs. Johanna C. Samuels, formerly of Nashville, Tenn., and Washington, D. C., but who has been in New York for several months organizing a railroad and other projects, has written to President Roosevelt offering him a tract of mining land in Kentucky to be mined by the government without compensation to the donor during the continuance of the strike. Mrs. Samuels said to a reporter Sunday:

"I am making the offer simply because the property is idle. It is no expense to me at the present time, and I would be at no loss if a quantity of the coal is mined. I do not ask one cent from the government or any favors. I will leave the arrangements of all details entirely to the president and let him do as he sees fit."

TO THE MINERS STRIKE FUND.

The New York Typographical Union Will Increase Weekly Contribution.

New York, Oct. 6.—By an unanimous vote Typographical Union No. 6, of New York city, Sunday decided to increase its weekly contributions to the miners' strike fund to 2 per cent. of the wages of its members, which will make the weekly contribution about $1,800 to $2,000.

Money was contributed by the Central Federated Labor union at its meeting Sunday. Some unions assessed their members at the rate of 2 per cent. of their wages. Other unions made lump sum contributions.

ATTEMPTED LYNCHING.

The Mob Failed to Batter Down the Doors to the Cell.

Lincolnton, N. C., Oct. 6.—A mob of men Sunday afternoon gained admittance into the jail here and attempted to secure Galvin Elliott, a Negro charged with having criminally assaulted a white woman near this place, but they failed to batter down the doors to the cell in which Elliott was confined. It is feared that further attempts of violence will be made, and in answer to a telegram from Judge Hoke, of this county, Gov. Aycott has ordered a special term of court to be called for the Negro's trial.

West Virginia Strike Ends.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Oct. 6.—A telegram was received at strike headquarters Sunday announcing that the strike of the employes of the Kanawha and Hocking Valley Coal Co., involving between 5,000 and 6,000 men, in West Virginia has ended satisfactorily to both sides.

Washington, Oct. 6.—The 36th annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic began here Monday, and with the meeting of the various auxiliary organizations affiliated with the main body will continue until next Saturday. The local committee has taken every precaution for the protection of life and limb and the housing of those who will be unable to find hotel accommodations. For indigent veterans large tents have been erected on the white house lot and several floors of the new government printing office have been utilized. Great crowds of visitors have been pouring into the city throughout the day and at the railroad stations it is said that the number of persons coming to the encampment is perhaps greater than ever before brought to the city on any occasion.

The business houses and private residences along Pennsylvania avenue and the other main thoroughfares of the city have been appropriately decorated for the encampment season. The display of flags and bunting is very generous.

MINERS' DEFENSE FUND.

Increased Business In Money Order Department Indianapolis Post Office.

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 3.—The collection of the big defense fund for the anthracite strikers created a record-breaking business for the money order department of the Indianapolis post office for the quarter ending Wednesday. The report of Charles W. Byfield, superintendent of the money order department, to George F. McGinnis, postmaster, shows that the receipts for the last three months this year were $865,451.13. The receipts for the corresponding period last year were $512,564.17.

Mr. McGinnis and Mr. Byfield both say the increase is due largely to the business coming from the headquarters of the mine workers. As high as $25,000 a day has been cashed for W. B. Wilson, secretary and treasurer of the miners, since the collection of the defense fund began. It has been necessary largely on account of this business for the government to increase the reserve fund at New York to $100,000. It was formerly only $20,000.

Mr. Byfield's report is one indication of the amount of money the miners are receiving for the relief of the anthracite strikers. It is understood on good authority that not more than one-third of the contributions came in the form of money orders, so it seems probable that the miners are not falling much short of the $500,000 a week they expected to collect when arrangements for the fund were made at their national convention in Indianapolis in July.
